Held that the deed of 17-1-1905 did, on its true construction, afford clear proof that the donor intended to make and did make a gift to his wife of a life interest only in the entire property comprised in the deed together with a power of alienation in respect of one-third of the property.

The donor by the terms of the deed purported to make a gift without consideration to his wife of the entire property detailed therein; he divided the property into two parts, one-third and two-thirds, with a view to giving his wife a power to alienate the one-third of the property or any part thereof by way of mortgage, sale or gift. The provision as to reversion is not limited to the two thirds over which the wife was to have no power of alienation, but it related to the "entire property gifted away by this document." The "entire property" was to revert to the collaterals, but it would, of course, be subject to any mertgage, sale or gift which the wife had power to make during her lifetime in respect of the one-third of the property. A Mahomedan lady was a co-sharer in certain villages with F, her husband's brother. She did not enter into possession or receipt of the profits of her share of the estate, but received allowances of money and grain. She did not, however, give up her claim to a share of the estates. F executed a deed in favour of the lady, whereby he made a gift of two villages in lieu of the allowance which she was in receipt of till then, and put her in possession. The deed went on to say that the lady "may manage the said villages for herself, and apply their income to meet her necessary expenses and to pay the Government revenue." and that "F and his heirs would make no objection or opposition." Then, written by way of postcript, F said:—"I declare that these villages have been given in lieu of the former Rs, 500 cash and 100 maunds of grain, and that henceforth the said money and the grain shall not be given."

The lady executed an ikrarnamah of even date with the above deed; and the two instruments evidently formed but one transaction. The ikrarnamah recited the allotment of the two villages to her in lieu of her maintenance, and contained an important clause by which she disclaimed and relinquished all her right as a co-sharer to the whole of the ancestral estate.

Held, affirming the Courts below, that the transaction evidenced by the deeds was a gift for consideration and that the words "I do declare and record that the aforesaid sister-in-law may manage....and to pay the Government revenue" had not the effect in cutting down the gift to an ariat (38).

Those words used after words of absolute gift must be read as descriptive of the motive or consideration of the gift, and ineffectual to control the operation of technical words of gift (38-9). - Distinction.

A gift made by a deed which is voluntary is void under the Mahomedan Law, unless it is accompained by a delivery of such possession as the subject of the gift is susceptible of. According to that law, a holder of property may in his lifetime give away the whole or part of it if he complies with certain forms, but it is incumbent on those who seek to set up such a transaction to prove that those forms have been complied with, and this will be so whether the gift be made with or without consideration. If the latter, then unless it be accompanied by delivery of the thing given, so far as it is capable of delivery, it will be invalid. If the former, delivery of possession is not necessary, but actual payment of the consideration must be proved, and the bone fide intention of the donor to divest himself in praesenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee must also be proved (221). - Validity of -Conditions-Delivery of possession-

When a gift is coupled with consideration, delivery of possession is not necessary for its validity. But actual payment of the consideration, and the bona fide intention of the donor to divest himself in praesenti of the property, and to confer it upon the donee, must be proved. (Sir Ford North.) It was contended that this was a deed of gift for a consideration, and therefore that the delivery of possession was not necessary. It was, however, conceded that in order to make the deed valid in this view of the case, two conditions at all events must concur, viz. an actual payment of the consideration on the part of the donce, and a home fide intention on the part of the donor to divest himself in practenti of the property, and to confer it upon the dance. Undoubtedly, the adequacy of the consideration is not the question. A consideration may be perfectly valid which is wholly inadequate in amount when compared with the thing given. Some of the cases have gone so far as to say that even a gift of a ring may be a sufficient consideration; but whatever its amount, it must be actually and bona fide paid (307-8). (Sir Robert P. It was treated by the Nizamut Adawlut as being the record of an act done by a police officer, and not the judicial proceeding of a Magistrate. It is therefore difficult to see how, in strictness, it can be evidence at all against the husband; but at most it proves only that the Magistrate set the lady free from what he considered improper restraint. To establish a case of cruelty as a defence to the suit, the wife might have called the Magistrate to speak to the state in which he found her when he set her free (616). (Sir James W. Colvile.) The Mahomedan Law, on a question of what is legal cruelty between man and wife, would probably not differ materially from our own, of which one of the most recent expositions is the following :-" There must be actual violence of such a character as to endanger health or safety; or there must be a reasonable apprehension of it." "The Court," as Lord Stowell said, " has never been driven off this ground." (611-2).

In a suit, therefore, by a Mussulman husband against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, if the defence of the wife be cruelty, she must prove cruelty of the kind just described (612). (Sir James W. Colvile.) MOONSHEE BUZLOOR RUHEEM P. SHUMSOONNISSA BEGUN.

-Defences open to wife in.

It by no means follows that to a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights by a Mussulman husband against his wife, the latter has not other defences to the suit (than cruelty) which would not be admitted by our Ecclesiastical Courts in a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights. The marriage tie amongst Mahomedans is not so indissoluble as it is amongst Christians. The Mahomedan wife has rights which the Christian-or at least the English-wife has not against her husband. An Indian Court might well admit defences founded on the violation of those rights, and either refuse its assistance to the husband altogether, or grant it only upon terms of his securing the wife in the enjoyment of her personal safety, and her other legal rights; or it might, on a sufficient case, exercise that jurisdiction which is attributed to the Kazee by the Futwa (if the law, indeed, warrants such a jurisdiction), of selecting a proper place of residence for the wife, other than her husband's house (612).

Their Lordships do not mean to lay down that it was sufficient for the decision of the case to show that, according to the Mahomedan Law, the husband has a right to the custody of his wife, or that there was no answer to his suit unless it could be shown that the wife had been separated from him either by Talak or Kolah, either of which would dissolve the vinculum. It seems to their Lordships clear that, if cruelty in a degree rendering it unsafe for the wife to return to her busband's dominion were established, the Court might refuse to send her back. It may be, too, that gross failure by the husband of the performance of the obligations which the marriage contract imposes on him for the benefit of the wife, might, if properly proved, afford good grounds for refusing to him the assistance of the Court. And there may be cases in which the Court would qualify its interference by imposing terms on the husband. But all these are questions to be carefully considered, and considered with some reference to Mahomedan Law (615-6). (Sir James W. Some reference to Salaria Some reference to Shum-Colvile.) RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS—SUIT FOR— LAW APPLICABLE TO.

Malemedan law -Equity and good conscience.

A suit by a Mussulman bushand against his wife for restitution of conjual rights must be determined according to the principles of the Mahomedan law, This proposition follows not merely from the imperative words of S. 15 of Beng, Reg. IV of 1793, but from the nature of the thing. For since the rights and duties resulting from the contract of marriage may vary in different communities, so, especially in India, where there is no marriage law, they can be only ascertained by reference to the particular law of the contracting parties (610). The determination of any suit of this kind requires careful consideration of the Mahomedan law, as well as strict proof of the facts to which it is to be applied (612). Their Lordships most emphatically dissent from the conclusion that cases of this kind are to be decided without reference to the Mahomedan law, but according to what is termed, "equity and good conscience," i.e., according to that which the Judge may think the principles of natural justice require to be done in the particular case. It is opposed to the whole policy of the law in British India, and particularly to S. 15 of Beg. Reg. IV of 1793, which directs, that in suits regarding marriage and caste, and all religious usages and institutions, the Mahomedan laws with respect to Mahome lans, the Hindu laws with regard to Hindoos, are to be considered as the general rules by which Judges are to form their decisions; and their Lordships can conceive nothing more likely to give just alarm to the Mahomedan community than to lean by a judicial decision, that their law, the application of which has been thus secured to them, is to be over-ridden upon a question which so materially concerns their domestic relations. Their Lordships object to the general supersession of the Mahomedan law as the ratio decidendi in cases of this description (614-5).

Quaere, as to the law to be applied in cases in which the Mahomedan law was in plain conflict with the general Municipal law, or with the requirements of a more advanced and civilised society,—as for instance, if a Mussulman had insisted on the right to slay his wife taken in adultery (614-5). RIGHT OF FORMER AS AGAINST LATTER.

The matrimonial law of the Mahomedans, like that of every ancient community, favours the stronger sex. The husband can dissolve the tie at his will, subject to the condition of paying the wife her dower and other allowances; but she cannot separate herself from him, except under the arrangement called Khoola, which is made upon terms to which both are assenting parties, and operates in law as the divorce of the wife by the husband. It cannot be doubted that, whilst the tie subsists, his power over her is consider-

MAHOMEDAN LAW-(Contd.)

Husband and wife-(Contd.)

RIGHT OF FORMER AS AGAINST LATTER—(Contd.) able. The cases are to the effect that he may compel her to return to his house if she has left it. We do not find this expressed in the Hedayah; but it seems implied throughout that she, from the time she enters his house, is under restraint, and can only leave it legitimately by his permission or upon a legal divorce or separation made with his consent. In fact, the principle of keeping a man's harem in seclusion and under his control is so essental a part of the framework of oriental society, that it is naturally assumed and taken for granted by the Mussulman expounder of the law (610-1). RIGHT OF LATTER AGAINST FORMER.

-Status and rights of wife.

On the other hand, the Mahomedan law assures to the wife considerable rights as against her husband. She may insist on maintenance according to her rank and ability; and if he fails to give it, she may enforce that right before the Kazee. If he has power to keep her within the zenana and to prevent access to her, subject to certain qualifications, he is bound to provide her with a separate apartment, exclusively appropriated to her use. As to personal violence, there are certainly passages in the Hedayah which imply that the husband may use it for correction; but this right of corporal chastisement is expressly said to "be restricted to the condi-tion of safety". The marriage tie amongst Mahomedans is not so indissoluable as it is amongst Christians. The Mahomodan wife, as has been shown above, has rights which the Christian-or at least the English-wife has not against her husband (611-2). (Sir James W. Colvile.)

Nor are their Lordships prepared to accept without qualification the statement that it is necessary to reject as useless for proving the custom (by which, in the event of intestacy, daughters of the deceased are excluded in favour of their brothers, and sisters in favour of male paternal collaterals) " all those instances where we have no evidence that the deceased left any estate at all, or where there is no evidence to show its nature or value, or the amount of liabilities against it, e.g., whether or not it consisted merely of a Jagir, or mafi land, or of heirlooms, or of land heavily mortgaged, or of the family demesne; where there is no proof and no admission that the lady said to have been excluded had a legal claim to a share under the ordinary law; where, in case of a married lady, we have no evidence showing the actual amount of dowry received; where, in case of unmarried ladies, there is no proof that they knew of the custom and stood aside in obedience to it. And in all those cases where a witness states that he has himself excluded his own sisters, or nieces, our judgment as to the value of such statement as evidence of the custom having been enforced must be held in syspense until there is also evidence before as that the ladies had independent advice, and, with full and intelligent knowledge of the custom voluntarily acquiesced in their exclusions." An example of each of the conditions there laid down ought certainly to be established by some witness, but it is not, in their Lordships' opinion, necessary that all should be proved in every case, as this might greatly weaken the evidence by tradition to which in a custom of the character under consideration great weight is due (15).

In determining whether claims are not met because the rights to which they relate do not exist, or whether they are put on one side because, in the circumstances, there is no need that they should be asserted, the position and relationship of the different members of the family must always be considered (17).

It ought not to be assumed that a custom fails because certain of the instances brought forward in its support may be referable to other causes than the custom relied upon; nor again, because in certain respects some of the witnesses may be found untrustworthy (18).

In every case of this kind the burden of proof lies heavily upon the plaintiff (the party setting up the custom), and, though his evidence may consist of a number of striking instances in support of his case, it receives a severe blow when prominent members of the families concerned deny that the custom exists (19),

The best evidence associated with any such custom as that alleged would be found in connection with the division of land (20).

The argument put forward by the defendant that, in many of the cited instances, the women said to have been

FEMALES—EXCLUSION OF—CUSTOM OF—(Contd.) excluded have been provided with dowries either in the lifetime of the owner of the estate, on the division of which they received no benefit, or after his death by a male relation, and that this was equivalent to and must be taken as a recognition of their right to share, is one to which their Lordships are unalle to accede. It is quite possible that the husband of a wife who had been suitably dowered would not desire to claim rights of inheritance against those by whose generosity or at whose expense the dower had been provided, but this would not involve the conclusion that the right to share existed and had been satisfied by the dower (20).

Again, such an argument, though it might affect inheritance as between father and daughter, would not cover the present case, for if a daughter had been dowered by her father, and this were treated as equivalent to an advancement of her share in his estate, this would not affect a claim like the present put forward by a woman to a share in her brother's estate by whom she had never been dowered at all (20). -Lubbai Mahomedans - Custom among-Onus of proof of-Madras Civil Courts Act III of 1873, S. 16-Effect.

The litigants were Lubbai Mahomedans of the Sunni sect, and the contest was as to the devolution of the estate of one H. The decision of the rival claims depended upon whether the devolution of H's estate was governed by Mahomedan law as the plaintiffs contended or by a rule of descent excluding females as the contesting defendants maintained.

Held, that the litigants being Mahomedans to whom the Madras Civil Courts Act III of 1873 applied, the presumption, under S. 16 of that Act, was that the Mahomedan law governed all questions of succession among them, and that the onus lay on the contesting defendants of proving a valid custom at variance with that law, and not on the plaintiff to prove an abandonment of the Hindu rule of exclusion set up (124).

Held further, on the evidence, that the defendants had failed to establish a custom or usage excluding females from succession. (Sir Lawrence Jenkins.) MUHAMMAD IBRA-HIM ROWTHER 2: SHAIKH IBRAHIM ROWTHER.

HINDU CUSTOMS-RETENTION OF.

Proof of.

In a case relating to the succession to the estate of a deceased Mahomedan, the question was whether Hindu customs were preserved in the family.

The fact of the family having been at one time Hindus was not only not proved, but it was negatived by some of the witnesses. It was not only also proved that any Hindu laws had been preserved and acted upon in the family as customs. In fact the proof of the existence of any customs in the family entirely failed. It further appeared that the deceased was himself a strict Mahomedan.

Held, that there was no foundation for the contention, and that the rights of the parties must be determined by the rules of Mahomedan law as applicable to the facts of the case (11). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) NAWAB MUHAM-MAD AZMAT ALI KHAN P. MUSSUMAT LALLI BEGUM,

The prevalence of customary rules of succession in the Province of Oudh has been recognised in the statute law of Oudh, as well as of the Punjab and the North-Western Province, which provides that in matters of succession the ordinary rules of Mahomedan and Hindu law are only to be applied in the absence of such customs, though the custom set up must be proved by satisfactory evidence, but without insisting on the rigorous and technical rules which would be applicable to such a case in England. There is, therefore, in the Province of Oudh, no presumption against the existence of a custom of succession superseding the ordinary rules of Mahomedan law.

PLEA OF-VALIDITY.

Test-Females-Exclusion of-Custom of.

The dispute was as to the devolution of the estate of a deceased Labbai Mahomedan of the Sunni sect. The question was whether the devolution of the deceased's estate was governed by Mahomedan law as the plaintiffs coatended or by a rule of descent excluding females as the contesting defendants maintained. The contesting defendants set up what they called an immemorial custom and ancient usage. In their written statement they pleaded as follows: Para. 15.-It has been the immemorial custom and ancient usage in the Mahomedan families in the district of Coimbatore in general and in the families of these defendants and the relations in particular that they have followed the Hindu law as regards the law of property and succession and partition. Only the male members are entitled to succeed to the properties of their ancestors and females are excluded from inheritance when there are males. Besides it is also the custom in the Mahomedan families to give some amount including jewels at the time of or immediately after marriage to the female members in lieu of their shares; and consistently with that usage defendants' father gave jewels, cash, and other moveables worth about Rs. 4,000 to the mother of the second plaintiff immediately after the marriage and the plaintiffs conduct in not adverting to this in the plaint is fraudulent. Para, 16,-According to that immemorial custom and usage the plaintiffs have no right to claim a share in the share of P. Ammal while P. Ammal berself had no share. Para. 17.—It has been the custom also in the family of the plaintiffs."

Held that the custom or usage as pleaded was open to objection and that the defendant's contention was liable to be rejected on that ground. (Sir Lawrence Jenkins.) MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM ROWTHER 2. SHAIKH IBRAHIM covery of the shares of .M in certain villages, alleging a customary rule of succession which superseded the Mahomedan law and entitled the 1st plaintiff to succeed to .M's estate as his nearest male agnate on the death of the junior widow.

In the year 1870 the Wajib-ul-arz or records of the suit villages were completed; and in them, pursuant to the directions in Oudh Circular No. 20 of 1863, the customary rules of succession observed by the co-sharers in those villages were recorded and attested by or on behalf of the co-sharers. They supported the plaintiff's case that the widows succeeded only to a life interest, though they included an unfounded claim on the part of the widows to full powers of disposition over the estate.

Held, reversing the Chief Court and restoring the Subordinate Judge, that the plaintiffs had established the existence of a customary rule of succession in the family of the parties to the suit under which in default of male heirs and of daughters, each of the widows took an interest for life in a moiety of her husband's estate with reversion to the male agnates of the husband.

In their Lordships' opinion the fact that on the death of M in 1865 his widows were allowed to succeed to his estate without any claim by his other heirs, and in accordance with the custom recorded a few years later in the Wajib-ularz of the villages forming part of his estate sufficiently establishes that the ordinary rules of Mahomedan law were superseded in this family by a customary rule of succession; and they are unable to agree that these Wajib-ul-arz are of no use to the plaintiffs, merely because they include an unfounded claim on the part of the widows to full powers of disposition over estate.

Semble, the Wajib-ul-arz did not establish a right of survivorship between the widows. (Sir John Wallis.) SHEIKH ROSHAN ALI KHAN P. CHAUDHRI ASGHAR ALL.

The appeal arose out of a suit relating to the right to inherit the property of A, a Mahomedan lady. One of the questions for decision was whether P, her mother, was entitled to a share of her property. The objection made to the title of P to inherit was, that she was a slave of the paternal grandmother of A, when A was begotten,

There was no evidence that P was a slave as asserted. Her status of slavery was not directly proved, and the circumstances rather repelled than supported the presumption, that that disqualifying status existed. It was admitted, on all hands, that A was not treated as the spurious offspring of her tather, but as his lawful daughter, and as such entitled to inherit a share of his property. The appellants, who objected to the title of P to succeed, wholly failed to prove her status, or that if she was the slave of the grandmother of A, that the latter (grandmother) gave her over, for a time, to the embraces of her son.

All that was proved with certainty was, that A was treated as the legitimate child and one of the co-heirs of her father, and that P was her mother, and therefore presumably confitted to inherit to her. The grandmother of A had in the strongest way recognised her as a legitimate child of her son. She was so brought up in the family, and the ceremony of her marriage was performed with much pomp and ceremony.

Held that, though there was no direct evidence to support the presumption of marriage between P and A's father, the admission of the legitimacy of A by the appellants, to be implied from their conduct, was amply sufficient, after the deaths of the child and her father, for the purpose, and stood in the place of proof against them (201).

It is to be observed that there would be no unsurmountable obstacle to such a presumption in this case, even if it had been proved that I' had been the slave of A' grandmother, for her mistress might have been emancipated her for the purpose of making the relations between her son and the girl lawful. After the acknowledgments above refered to, A's grandmother and the appellants who act with her ought so have been prepared with strong and conclusive evidence to rebut the presumption raised by their own acts and conduct; and in the absence of such evidence they think the presumption must prevail (201). An arbitrator appointed to divide the property of M, a deceased Mahomedan, among those whom he should find entitled to share in it, made his award in February, 1888, and in it he included M and his children among "the heise and legatees" among whom the estate of the deceased was to be divided. M was a son of M and had been admittedly missing from 1870. M died in 18-4. The question was whether the proceedings in the arbitration could be regarded as an admission on the part of the other heirs, or as a finding by the arbitrator, that M was then alive.

The arbitrator was not examined. There was nothing to show that A was a party to the reference.

Held, that the proceedings in the arbitration could not be regarded as an admission on the part of the other hers, or as a finding by the arbitrator, that A was then alive (180).

The effect of the award was to recognise that A was missing, and to set aside his share until he should be found, or be proved or declared by competent authority to be dead. The statement in the award as to the number of sons left by M, which number included A, could not by itself be treated as proof that the arbitrator had satisfied himself that all M's children were then alive. The reservation of a share to A and his children was intelligible on the ground that, according to the Mahomedan law, a share ought to be reserved for a missing heir (180). (Six Andrew Scotle.)

Their Lordships confirmed the decision of the lower appellate Court that where daughters of a deceased Mahomedan were excluded from inheritance by custom, the daughters should be treated as non-existent, and the exclusion of daughters should operate for the benefit of other persons, who became heirs in default of daughters. inter vivos to alter succession if a-Validity.

Where a gift was made by a Mahomedan father to his son with the object of giving the son a larger share of the father's property than would come to him by succession ab intestate, and the court below treated the transaction as fraudulent in contemplation of law, and done in evasion of its provisions, which limit the testamentary power of a Mahomedan, and aim in some degree at equality of a decision among the descendants ab intestato, their Lordships observed as follows:-The law of succession ab intestate applies only to the assets which constitute the succession. If the law allows alienation to defeat a succession, the question, whether a subject of property is part of the assets, or not, raises simply the question, whether the transfer of it is legally complete. The design to alter, and so in one sense to defeat, the disposition of property, is simply a design to conform to the law, whilst working out an unforbidden design. If, therefore, the law suffer a father by an act, inter vives, to alter his succession his exercise of that power cannot be deemed a fraud upon the law (546-7). (Sir Edward V. Williams.) In a Mahomedan family in which custom was followed in matters of inheritance, the plaintiff alleged that the principle of representation was sanctioned by the custom and she claimed that, by virtue of it, she, as the brother's daughter of the deceased, in the absence of male issue, represented him and stood in his place. It was shown that sex was not a bar to representation and that an uncle's daughter was entitled to be her father's representative for the purpose of inheritance. But no instance was proved of an actual succession by a brother's daughter.

-Suit by person claiming to be-Relationship of-Proof of-Quantum-Long possession with defendant (widow of deceased)-Presumption in her favour.

Plaintiff sued to recover from defendant (a widow) threefourth of an estate, alleged to have been left by the defendant's deceased husband. Plaintiff's claim was as a residuary. It was found that the defendant had been in posses. sion of the whole estate for about eleven years. It also appeared that in certain proceedings in the Revenue Department held immediately after the death of the deceased, in which the defendant (widow) set herself up as the sole heiress of the deceased, the plaintiff did not put forward his claim to the three-fourths share, though he was aware of such proceedings. It was also found that the defendant (widow) got the registry in the Government Books transferred in her sole name. Nor did the plaintiff take any objection on that occasion. The defendant had thus been in undisturbed possession for more than eleven years There was also some documentary evidence in corroboration of the case set up by the defendant. The Judicial Commit-tee, under the circumstances, observed that there was a strong presumption in favour of the title of the defendant supported by long possession, and the conduct of the plaintiff, that the plaintiff failed to discharge the burden of proving his title; and held that the plaintiff, who had sanctioned long possession with the defendant, should not be allowed lightly to disturb it or to escape from those legitimate inferences and presumptions which, on a conflict of evidence, arose from his own acts and conduct. The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the respon-dent, the Nawab Nazim of Bengal, against the heirs of one .V deceased, to recover possession of the zemindaree, Pergunnah G.

The zemindaree to which the respondent laid claim was purchased by A, the widow of a former Nawab Nazim. It was purchased by her at a revenue sale benamee, in the name of M, and it was her (A') property at the time of her death. M was one of her heirs according to the Mahomedan law. On the death of A, the plaintiff-respondent claimed to be entitled to succeed to her properties, including the suit zemindary, according to the long-established custom of his family. Thereupon M executed a document called a ladoceinamah in favour of the plaintiff by which he (M) acknowledged that neither he nor his heirs, except for his support and maintenance and that of his children and dependents, had any sort of claim to all or any of the properties of the said .4, and prayed that proper orders might be passed for the support of himself and of his children and defendants. Thereupon the plaintiff ordered a perwannah to be delivered to M which declared that the olaintiff should grant to M and his heirs, from generation to generation, Rs. 600 per month, upon condition that he should always remain submissive to the plaintiff, and never depart from his arrangement. The plaintiff also paid M an advance of Rs. 2,000 on account of the monthly allowance of Rs. 600 granted.

Held that M and his heirs were bound by the ladawynamah and were precluded from setting any title to the properties of A. including the suit zemindaree, against the plaintiff (169).

The ladawinamah and the perwannah amounted to a valid contract by which the plaintiff and M were respectively bound. Even assuming that upon the death of A her property did not go over to the plaintiff according to usage, and that M executed the ladawinamah in ignorance of his strict right, still as the plaintiff acted bona fide under the belief that he had succeeded to the property of A and executed the perwannah upon the faith of the ladatoi disclaimer, the defendants would be bound by them. Even if the ladareinamah did not amount to a grant, it contained an agreement not to set up any claim to the property, and being founded upon a sufficient consideration, was binding upon the heirs of N, and precluded them from setting up a claim to the property. In any view of the case, M or his heirs could not assert any title to the property without setting aside the ladawinamah, and this they could not do, except upon the terms of returning the Rs. 2,000 which were paid upon the faith of the arrangement, and as a payment in advance on account of the allowance granted to

The question was as to the right to succeed to an immoveable estate of IV, a Mahomerlan lady, who died childless and intestate in the year 1881. That depended upon whether IV was, in point of fact, a Shia or a Sunni. was for many years the wife of a staunch member of the Shia sect, who died in the year 1865.

The evidence applicable to the period preceding the death of IV's husband tended, thought not strongly, to the inference that, from her birth until her marriage, IV was a Sunni. It was not matter of dispute that, during the whole of her married life, her outward acts and observances amounted to a profession of the Shia faith. The evidence applicable to the period following the dissolution of her marriage pointed strongly to the conclusion that, throughout her widowhood, she was a member of the Sunni sect, having returned to the religion of her youth, and discarded that which was temporarily imposed upon her by the necessities of her position as a Shia wife.

Held that the true inference from the above facts was that IV died a Sunni, and that the succession to her estate was accordingly governed by the Sunni rule of descent (81).

The question was as to the right to succeed to the immoveable estate of W. a Mahomedan lady, who died childless and intestate in July, 1881. That question depended upon whether W was, in point of fact, a Shia or a Sunni. W was for many years the wife of a staunch member of the Shia sect, who died in the year 1865. The appellants (plaintiffs) were, if the deceased IV was a Shia, admittedly her legal heirs; while, if she was a Sunni, the defendantrespondent would be admittedly entitled to take her estate to the exclusion of the appellants. The respondent was in possession, and had been duly registered as owner in the books of the revenue authorities, and the appellants sought by the suit to eject him.

The facts proved by the evidence with respect to the religious observances of the deceased W after her husband's death, all supported the conclusion that she was a Sunni at the time of her own decease,

The question was as to the right to succeed to the im-movable estate of IV, a Mahomedan lady, who died childless and intestate in the year 1881. That question depended upon whether the deceased was, in point of fact, a Shia or a Sunni. She was for many years the wife of II, a staunth member of the Shia sect, who died in the beginning of the year 1865.

The evidence shewed that, after her husband's death, W made a journey to Ajmere, in order to visit a Sunni Shrine in the company of a "Pir." or spiritual guide of the Sunni sect, whose office and its functions were unknown among the Shias. It also shewed that on her way to Ajmere the deceased partook of the holy meals, which are intended for Sunnis, in the house of the Pir. There was also oral evidence, not so clear or reliable as that which related to the Ajmere pilgrimage, but tending in the same direction, to the effect that the deceased, during her widowhood, regularly observed the eleventh day of each month, and held Maulud Shariff meetings in her house, those being admittedly Sunni

In a case in which the plaintiff claimed the property of a deceased Mahomedan lady on the ground of her being the sister's daughter of the deceased, the defendants, who, either knew the real facts from the first or could easily have ascertained them, pleaded in their written statement that the plaintiff's mother was not a sister of the deceased at all. At the trial, however, they went further and set up that the plaintiff was not the daughter of her alleged mother but was the daughter of that alleged mother's husband by another of his wives. That further development in their case was obviously due to the fact that the documentary evidence clearly showed that the plaintiff's alleged mother was a sister of the deceased.

Held that the defendants' failure to put forward, in the first instance, the plea put forward by them at the trial, in the circumstances of the case, greatly impaired the effect of the purely oral evidence by which they sought to prove that part of their case (36). LIFE INTEREST IN MOVEABLES AND IMMOVEABLES OF HER HUSBAND.

-Right to-Wajib ul-ar:-Construction.

The plaintiff-respondent, the widow of a deceased Mahomedan, seed for a declaration of her right to inherit the entire property left by the deceased and for recovery of possession of the same from the defendant, the brother of the deceased, who had taken possession of the same on the death of the deceased. The plaintiff alleged that she, according to the custom and the entries made in the Settlement wajib-ul-arz, was entitled to succession and to inherit the entire property left by her deceased husband. The plaintiff's claim included moveables and cash and deposit money,

The wajib-ul-are referred to in the plaint was of a village. in form of a joint zemindari tenure, of which the deceased had a half share. It contained in paragraph 4, relating to right of transfer and inheritance, the following statement:

A daughter, or her issue, does not get any share. If the deceased co-sharer have no male issue, but a female issue only, then indeed in that case the female issue can get a share. If all the wives be childless, they shall for their lifetime remain in possession of the deceased's inheritance in equal shares, with proprietary power,"

Held that the custom stated in the wajib-ul-arz applied to moveable property as well as to immoveables and that the court below erred in not including the moveable property in the declaration that the plaintiff had a life interest (159).

The decree of the court below was accordingly amended by making the declaration apply also to the moveables and the cash and deposit money (159). (Sir Richard Couch.) MAHOMED RIASAT ALI v. MUSSUMAT HASIN BANU.

The appeal arose out of a suit relating to the right to inherit the property of A, a Mahomedan lady. One of the questions for decision was whether the marriage of A with the 1st respondent was perfect at her death so as to confer a right on him, as her husband, to inherit.

The ceremony of a marriage between A and the 1st respowlent was performed on 16-10-1859, in the Facedice (translated, nominal) form. Both were then minors, and were so treated; the evidence was that she was eight years and some months old, be about nine. A's father was then dead, and the marriage was contracted by .M. her grandmother. It was celebrated with great pomp in the presence of the grandmother and the relatives of the girl. A's mother associated in the marriage. She was not directly consulted, but she was quite agreeable. Soon after the marriage Mtook A to Arabia to visit the holy places, and the girl (A) died there without having met or communicated with her husband since the marriage. Before her death A had attained the age of puberty; but there was no evidence that, after attaining it, the subject of the marriage was ever presented to her, or that she expressed in any way assent to or dissent from it.

Held that, by the law of Shiah School which governed the case, the marriage of A. unless her assent after attaining puberty could be shown, was imperfect, and could, if she died before such assent, create no rights or obligations (196-7).

Held further that, according to the Shiah doctrine, the girls must have arrived at puberty, and also be of mature understanding when her assent was given; and that, assuming A to have been by age and understanding capable of assenting, there was no sufficient evidence of the fact of her assent to satisfy the requirement of the law (197).

In this case there is neither evidence of express assent nor of facts from which it may be presumed. The girl was taken to Arabia, far from her betrothed husband, and there is no proof that the marriage was ever brought to her atten tion, or that she by word or conduct in any way recognised or ratified it (197-8).

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the evidence fails to show that the Fazoolee marriage had become perfect before A's death, and consequently that the claim of the 1st respondent to inherit as her husband has not been established (198). — Daughter—Marriage procision for—Difference as regards, from that made for aimittedly legitimate daughters—Evidentiary value of, as regards her legitimacy.

In a case in which the question was whether the respondent was the wife of S, it appeared that there was a difference between the provision made by S for the respondent's daughters on the occasion of their marriages and a similar provision made by him for another daughter of his admitted to be legitimate. It was argued that that circumstance showed that S knew that the respondent's daughters could not share in his estate.

Held that, for that point to be effectual, it must be shown that such a position was irreconcilable with the relationship, and not merely that it was improbable that if the relationship had existed such arrangements would have been made (534). ——Father's treatment of mother as reale and of son as legitimate on amounting to eval exidence of a declaration —What amounts to—Value of.

The question was whether the respondent was the lawful wife of F, and her son his lawful son.

The evidence clearly and indisputably shewed that the respondent was actually residing during a period of seven years in the female department of F; that she was so residing for a twelve month anterior to the birth of that child taking place; that she so resided, recognised to a certain extent, undoubtedly, as the wife of F; that the child was born under his coof; and that that child continued to be maintained in his house without any steps being taken on the part of F or of any one else to repudiate his title to the legitimacy as the offspeing of F.

Held, that there was a consecutive course of treatment both of the mother and of the child for a period of between 7 and 8 years under circumstances in which it appeared to their Lordships to be next to impossible that such a mode of treatment could have been adopted except upon the presumption of the cohabitation, and of the son being the issue of the loins of F, and that that was at least tantamount to an oral evidence of a declaration (321-3). ——Grandchildren's legitimary — Grandmether's ancertions as to, and as to there right to inherit—Value vi—Lax notions of several relationship in family—Effect.

The question was whether the respondent's mothers. S and II', were the legitimate daughters of Z, a son of II', a Mahomedan lady, and were as such the heirs of II'. There was evidence of express assertions by II' that S was the daughter of a mutai wife, and that J, the mother of II', was a mutai wife. As against those assertions evidence was given by witnesses at the trial, the effect of which was that in the family to which II' belonged very lax views as to sexual relations prevailed, and that for social purposes at least, legitimate and illegitimate children were treated alike.

Held, that such evidence could have no bearing upon statements by H that S and W were her granddaughters and heirs, and that they could have no tendency to neutralise the express assertions of H refused to above (206-7).

In their plaint and in the case presented by them to the Courts below, the plaintiffs persisted in the case that the defendant was not in any sense the son of W, that W was incapable of procreating children, that the defendant was a stranger brought in by means of a conspiracy, and that he was really the son of another. The Courts below found against the plaintiffs and held that the defendant was the legitimate son of W. On appeal to the Privy Council, the plaintiffs admitted the paternity of the defendant, but raised the contention that, though the natural son of W, the defendant was only his illegitimate and not his legitimate son and was never recognised by his father, a Mahomedan. Summary suit for administration of father's estate -Award of possession of a share in-Effect.

Respondent, who claimed to be a son of A as the issue of a Mootah or inferior marriage, and as having been acknowledged by A, in his lifetime, as his son, was put in possession of a third share of the property of A by a decree in a summary suit for the administration of his estate. Thereupon, the plaintiffs admitted to be the son and daughter of A, sued for a declaration of the illegitimacy of the respondent, claiming their father's property as his sole heirs. It was admitted on the pleadings that a Mootah marriage at some time had been contracted between the deceased A and the respondent's mother, but the plaintiffs stated in effect that the conception and birth of the respondent preceded that marriage.

Held that the onus of proof lay on the respondent, on the pleadings in the cause, to prove his mother's marriage. and his own legitimacy as a child of that marriage (118).

The title of the respondent, if established by the summary suit for the administration of the estate, was one in privity with the appellants' (plaintiffs') title. The mere fact of possession of a portion of the disputed property by either party was not a matter of any importance to the decision of the question on whom the burden of proof rested in the cause; that depended on the nature of the issues (108-9). who was himself a Sherwani Pathan, and that their mother was the lawful wife of E. The plaintiff's case, on the other hand, was that the appellants were the sons of E by Mussamat Durga, a Hindu married woman and the wife of one Cheta Dhobi, who was still alive at the time of the births of the appellants respectively.

The evidence admittedly showed that the connection between the appellant's mother and E had commenced many years, probably 50 years, before the trial, and that it continued regularly for about 40 years till the woman's death at E's house, about 4 years before the commencement of the action; that the appellants were brought up and treated by E as his legitimate sons, and that the plaintiff himself treated the n in every way during his father's lifetime as if they were his step-brothers.

The appellate Court held, and there was ample evidence to justify the conclusion at which the appellate Judges arrived, that the appellants were not the legitimate children of E, but were his children by a woman who was at the time proved to have been matried, and that therefore no rules of presumption of legitimacy or marriage could avail the appellants.

Their Lordships affirmed the appellate Court, which had reversed the Sub-Judge.

Whatever presumption may be raised from the facts (disclosed by the evidence as to treatment and recognition above set forth) cannot prevail against the conclusions, if they are supported by the evidence, that, as alleged by the plaintiff, the appellants were the children of a Hindu married woman whose husband was still alve at the time of the births of the appellants. It appeared that originally a sum of Rs. 140 a month had been allowed for plaintiff's maintenance but that subsequently, in consequence apparently of the state of the property, an agreement was made between the plaintiff and the defendant by which the plaintiff agreed to receive less for a period. The suit was not brought upon that agreement; but the plaintiff's case was mainly supported by that agreement. It was put forward at the outset of the case as his evidence by the pleader who appeared for him.

Held, that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to recover more than he agreed by that agreement to receive (49.50).

Maintenance-(Contd.)

RATE OF-AGREEMENT FIXING-(Contd.)

Suit for maintenance not based on Objection to-Privy Council appeal - Maintainability for first time in.

The plaintiff (respondent), the younger son of a deceased Mahomedan, sued the defendant (appellant), his ekler brother, for the recovery of arrears of maintenance at Rs. 140 a month, and a declaration of his right to maintenance in perpetuity, and to have it judicially declared that the maintenance was a debt due from the estate of his deceased father to which the defendant alone was held to be entitled.

It appeared that originally a sum of Rs. 140 a month had been allowed for plaintiff's maintenance but that subsequently, in consequence apparently of the state of the property, an agreement was made between the plaintiff and the defendant by which the plaintiff agreed to receive less for a period. In support of his case the plaintiff relied mainly upon the said agreement.

Before their Lordships, the defendant contended that a suit should have been brought upon the said agreement and not in the form in which it was brought. No such objection, however, was taken in the defendant's appeal to the court below.

Held that the objection could not be raised for the first time before their Lordships (47).

If there had been ground for this objection, it might and should have been taken when the defendant appealed to he Commissioner (the Court below). It was said that he could not know of the objection when the written statement was filed, because the agreement was produced for the first time at the hearing of the cause when evidence was given, and it had not been filed; but after the hearing, and after the production of the agreement, the defendant knew perfectly well that it was being used against him, and when he made his appeal to the Commissioner he could have taken this objection. If there is any ground for the objection it cannot be taken in the present stage of the proceedings (47), (Sir Richard Couch.) Ahmed Hossein Khan v. Niha-Luddin Khan. (1883) 10 L A. 45 =

SUIT BY YOUNGER BROTHER FOR, AGAINST ELDER IN POSSESSION OF PATERNAL ESTATE.

Maintainability-Prior suit against father on different cause of action-Dismissal of-Effect.

The plaintiff (respondent), the younger son of a deceased Mahomedan, sued the defendant (appellant), his elder brother, for the recovery of arrears of maintenance, and a declaration of his right to maintenance in prepetuity, and to have it judicially declared that the maintenance was a debt due from the estate of his deceased father to which the defendant alone was held to be entitled. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred by res judicata. The document on which he relied appeared to be an order made in a suit brought by the plaintiff against his father in which he claimed to be entitled to a monthly allowance for maintenance founded on some ikrarnama, which would appear to have been executed by his grandmother, who had the management of the property in consequence of the father being incapable of taking care of his affairs.

Held that the order was not one which would be residuated in the suit (47). The order was not an adjudication between the plaintiff and the defendant but between the plaintiff and his father, and it was altogether upon a different cause of action (47). (Sir Richard Couch.) Male members of family—Mortgage of ancestral property by - Female members' right to dispute validity of, as regards their shares.

 Estoppel—Circumstances not amounting to—Females purdanashin lastics.

The appellants were the female members of a Mahomedan family which in matters of worship had adopted the Hindu religion. There was no evidence that there was any custom in the family by which the Mahomedan law in regard to the descent of property had been altered or varied.

The respondent took a mortgage of ancestral property from the male members of the family. He made no inquiry of any of the female members or of their husbands. They were purdamathin ladies, and naturally left the management of the property in the hands of the males,

In a suit brought by the respondent to enforce his security against the family property, making both the males and the females parties, the High Court passed a decree against the females as well as against the males. The learned Judges of the High Court held that the male members "represented" the females in the transaction, because the females had not actively interfered with the property, and it appeared that in other transactions the male members of the family had dealt with the family property without the active concurrence of the females. There was, however, nor indeed was there any suggestion, at least in the evidence, that the appellants or any of them had misled the respondent either by word or conduct.

Held, reversing the High Court, that its decree was against all principle and authority. (Lord Macnaghten.) AZIMA BIBL P. SHAMALANAND. (1912) 40 C. 378 = 17 C.W.N. 121 = 13 M.L.T. 159 = (1913) M.W.N. 125 = 11 A.L.J. 169 = 17 C.L.J. 303 = 15 Bom. L.B. 423 = 17 I.C. 758 = 25 M.L.J. 55.

A was born in the prostitute caste. In 1872, criminal proceedings were taken against S by M, K's sister, for abduction of her sister and for wrongfully confining her in his house. Pending those proceedings, S instituted matrimonial proceedings against K, alleging that she was his wife and seeking restitution of conjugal rights. The suit and the criminal proceedings were settled by an agreement of 30—7—1872 between K and S. That agreement recited that a marriage had been made between them on 11—6—1869, and that K was the lawful wedded wife of S. In a case in which the appellants were proved to be the illegitimate sons of one E by a Hindu married woman whose husband was still alive at the time of their births, it appeared that the appellants had, on the death of their mother, sued E for the recovery of Rs. 170, alleged to be dower debt due to their late mother, and that E confessed judgment in that suit. That fact was claimed by the appellants as an admission by E of the fact that that the appellants mother was his latful wife. All the Judges of the High Court, however, found that that suit was a collusive one, and that having regard to the insignificant amount and the fact that E allowed himself to be sued and a judgment obtained, it could not be doubted that the sole object of the litigation was to have a record which could be put forward as supporting the factum of E's marriage with appellant's mother.

WIFE-ADMISSION AGAINST MARRIAGE BY.

The question in the case was whether M sued as a minor under the guardianship of her mother G, was the legitimate daughter of A by G. That question depended upon whether G was free to marry and did in fact marry A. A certified copy of a statement by G taken before a Magistrate was relied upon as conclusively disproving the case that G was free to marry and did in fact marry A.

The heading of the statement was in these words:—"G, wife of E,..., on solemn affirmation"—and it contained the following passage:—"I have lived with A these 12 or 14 years. I lived with him before his wife died, two years before that event."

WIFE-ADMISSION AGAINST MARRIAGE BY-(Contd.)

The Court below held that the statement with the heading was an admission by G that she had not been divorced by E and that she was not married to .1. The Court below was of opinion that the passage in the statement that G had "lived" with A for 12 or 14 years merely meant that "she had co-habited with him." Relying solely on this statement the court below reversed the judgment of the trial judge in favour of M.

Held, reversing the judgment of the court below, that the construction put upon the passage in the statement was harsh and uncalled for, and that the statemeat was not cu-titled to any weight as against .1/3 claim.

G seems for some reason or other to have been asked how long she had been living with A and to have answered correctly enough "for 12 or 14 years." It is difficult to suppose that the Magistrate, if it was the Magistrate by whom the question was asked, intended to convey any imputation on the witness, and equally difficult to suppose that the witness intended by her answer to make a confession of immorality, (Lord Macnaghten). ----Wife's petition on eve of husband's second marriage asserting her status and complaining of attempted second marriage-Value of.

The question was whether the respondent was the lawful wife of one F. She alleged that the marriage between them took place in 1797, and that, on the day of the marriage, F executed a deed of marriage settlement in her favour.

In 1813, when F was about to be married to the original appellant, the respondent, who opposed that union, presented a petition to the Zillah court, stating herself to be the wife of F, and setting forth the marriage settlement in her favour. She represented in that petition that F was kept away and not permitted to return to his own house, that there were a number of persons who had attempted to confine her, and not to permit her to go to F, and that he was about to marry another wife. She prayed that her husband might be prevented from granting a deed of marriage settlement without her concurrence. That petition was, however, rejected on the ground that, even supposing the whole facts contained in it to be true, the Court would not be justified in interfering for the purpose of preventing the contemplated marriage.

Held, that the petition was a document of the very greatest importance in the determination of the question (318.9).

The petition is an assertion of facts in conformity with the subsequent statement of this very person. The statement in it is made before there is any anticipation of a litigation of this description, and at a period when F is not considered or deemed to be incompetent. MAHOMEDAN LAW-(Contd.)

Marriage-Fazolee marriage.

- Girls' assent to-Evidence of, required-Presumption of assent-Circumstances justifying-Shia law.

It appears that the girl's assent to a Fazolee marriage, if a virgin, may be inferred from her silence when the matter is propounded to her; but a woman who is not must be put to the trouble of giving expression by actual speech to her assent. The mention of this distinction (which involves a concession to the modesty of a virgin) strongly indicates the view of the Sheeah School that assent must be evidenced in such a way as to leave no doubt that it is the act of the mind and will. Their Lordships, however, do not mean to hold that it must, in all cases, be shown that the question of the marriage was distinctly propounded to the girl. They have no doubt that assent may, in some cases, be presumed from the conduct and demeanour of the parties after they have attained puberty and mature under-standing. Circumstances may obviously exist which would properly lead to the inference that the marriage had been recognised and ratified, although no distinct assent could be proved (197). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) NEWAB MULKA JEHAN SAHIBA P MAHOMED USHKURREE KHAN.

Soonnee and Shia laws at to—Distinction.

As regards Fazolee marriages the law of the Soonnees appears to adopt a very stringent rule requiring the option of dissent to be declared by the girl as soon as puberty is developed. But the doctrine of the Sheeahs seems to be that the matter ought to be propounded to her, so that she may advisedly give or withhold her assent. This is a rational provision of law, for assent ought to be the expression of the mind and will of the girl upon the marriage when it is brought to her notice, and is present to her understanding (197). An attempt was made to prove a usage in the royal and noble families of Oudh that a girl married as a minor could not reject the marriage, although her guardians, who had assented to it, might be of a lower degree than her father or grandfather; but the evidence entirely falled to prove a usage having the force of law. The utmost that the Mahomedan gentleman who were examined proved was, that it would be unusual and unbecoming for a girl to reject such a marriage. But the question is not what the girl would have done, as a matter of propriety, if she had lived, and the question had been propounded to her, but what by law she had the power to do, if she chose to exercise it. All these witnesses acknowledged that they must be governed by the law of the Sheeah school; and their evidence almost involved the assumption that the girl would have had a right by law to disaffirm the marriage. but that it would be unbecoming in her to avail herself of it (198). Marriage-Finding of, on evidence and on conduct of opponent in fabricating documents to disprove marriage.

-Reversal of , without considering question of genuineness of those documents-Propriety.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought to establish the marriage of D, the first plaintiff, with A, a deceased Mahomedan Zemindar, and the parentage and legitimacy of her infant son, the second plaintiff, as son and heir of A; and consequently the titles of both to succeed to A, the widow to her share, and her son as a residuary legatee and heir

The defendants were the widow of A, his son, and the husband of a deceased daughter of A, who survived him, and was entitled to share in his estate. Besides denying the marriage of D and the legitimacy of her son, the widow of A set up a will alleged to have been executed by A, which, if true, would have completely deprived a second wife of A and her son of any portion of his estate. She also relied upon a kabooliat executed to her by D, which, if genuine, would have been an acknowledgment of her title by D. The plaintiffs alleged all those documents to be forgeries.

The trial Judge decided in favour of the marriage of D, and of the legitimacy of her infant son. He believed the evidence of the witnesses examined for the plaintiff. He was of opinion that the documents set up by the defendants to defeat the plaintiff's claim in any event were fabricated, and that the conduct of the defendants in fabricating the documents with the object was corroborative to some extent of the truth of the plaintiff's story.

On appeal, the Sudder Court reversed the decision below. But the learned Judges of that Court, instead of reviewing the whole case and expresssing their opinion upon all the points on which the Court below had based its conclusions, which were conclusions of fact, narrowed their enquiry to the simple question whether the plaintiff, D, had proved her marriage. They never addressed themselves to the ### Marriage-Ghair kuf marriage.

-Marriage between a man of Syed family and a tooman of Sheikh family if a-Exclusion from inheritance of wife in case of such marriage-Custom of-Evidence of. A amjib-ul-arz of a village stated, under the heading "Transfer of Property and Right of Inheritance":

A married wife belonging to a (ghair kuf) different caste and an unmarried wife, or their descendants will, provided they bear good conduct, be entitled to maintenance according to their status, and they will not be entitled to any share whether the property be partitioned or unpartitioned."

R. who had signed the toujubul-arz, was by family a Syed. His wife, IV, was by family a Sheikh, and the social position of her father appeared from the evidence to have been good.

Held that assuming that the entry in the wajib-ul-arz was sufficient to establish a custom by which a ghair kul wife was excluded from inheritance, the marriage between R and W would not fall within the ban implied by the term "ghair kuf". #### Marriage-Kharch i-pandan.

Prior to, and in consideration of, the plaintiff's marriage with the defendant's son, the defendant executed an agreement which recited that the marriage was fixed for the following November, and that "therefore" the defendant declared of his own free will and accord that he "shall continue to pay Rs. 500 per month in perpetuity" to the plaintiff for "her betel-leaf expenses, etc., from the date of the marriage, i.e., from the date of the income of certain properties therein specifically described, which he then proceeded to charge for the payment of the allowance.

Owing to the minority of the plaintiff, her "reception" into the conjugal domicile to which reference was made in the agreement did not take place until 6 years later, that is in 1883. The husband and wife lived together until 1896, when, owing to differences, she left her husband's house, and resided separately.

Held, on the construction of the agreement, that the defendant bound himself unreservedly to pay to the plaintiff the allowance fixed; that it was not a condition of the agreement that it should be paid only whilst the plaintiff was living in the husband's house, or that the defendant's liability should cease whatever the circumstances under which she happened to leave it.

The only condition relates to the time when, and the circumstances under which, defendant's liability would begin. That is fixed with reference to her first entry into her husband's house, when, under the Mahomedan law, the respective matrimonial rights and obligations come into existence. No other reservation was made. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) KHWAJA MUHAMMAD KHAN v. HUSEINI BEGUM.

-Nature and incidents of-Husband's control over-English Law-Pin-money in-Distinction.

Kharch-i-pandan, which literally means "betel-box expenses", is a personal allowance to the wife customary among Mahomedan families of rank, especially in Upper India, fixed either before or after the marriage, and varying according to the means and position of the parties. When they are minors, the arrangement is made between the respective parents and guardians. Although there is some analogy between this allowance and the pin-money in the English system, it appears to stand on a different legal footing, arising from difference in social institutions. Pinmoney, though meant for the personal expenses of the wife, has been described as "a fund which she may be made to spend during the coverture by the intercession and advice and at the instance of the husband." No obligation of that nature is attached to the allowance called Kharch-i-pandan. Ordinarily, of course, the money would be received and spent in the conjugal domicile, but the husband has hardly any control over the wife's application of the allowance, either in her adornment or in the consumption of the article from which it derives its name. ### DATE OF, BEFORE OR AFTER PREGNANCY.

In a case in which the legitimacy of the respondent was in question it was admitted on the pleadings that a Moottah marriage at some time had been contracted between the respondent's mother and his alleged father. There was, however, a total failure of proof whether marriage preceded or followed pregnancy. The Court below removed the difficulty by a presumption of an antecedent marriage. The question was whether the defect of the evidence in the case could be supplied by a presumption placing that marriage itself at a time anterior to pregnancy.

Held that, in considering the propriety of strengthening the weakness of the direct proof by such a presumption, it was material to observe that the mother was living at the time of the trial, and that the date of her marriage was a fact which she was competent to prove, as well as the time of the birth of her child (110-1).

No explanation has been afforded by the Judges who have heard this cause why the evidence fails on these important points, or why that is to be worked out by a presumption from marriage which living testimony might support, especially in a case where the treatment has been interrupted, and an impediment of more or less weight interposed by the reputation of the parentage by the reputed father. It would be an easy matter to legitimise a child conceived before marriage by withholding proof of the time of marriage, and resting on an inference from the marriage itself (110-1). (Sir James W. The omission, in a will made after an alleged nika marriage, of all mention of the nika wife, is, so far as it goes, an item of evidence against the marriage having taken place; but its cogency must depend on whether the circumstances of the marriage made it natural that the wife should be an object of the husband's testamentary bounty and improbable that he should have left her to depend on her legal right to

----Treatment of them by him as his children-Presumption of marriage from-Propriety-Direct evidence of marriage unsatisfactory.

The question was whether there was a marriage between the late Nawab and the 1st respondent before the births of the plaintiffs.

The direct evidence of the marriage was not very satis factory, and was in some respects contradictory. Still, there was positive evidence that a ceremony of marriage did take place before the births of the children. That direct evidence was met by the negative evidence of witnesses who said that if such a ceremony had taken place they must have known of it. From that state of the evidence, if it had stood alone, it would have been difficult to affirm that a marriage had been established.

Quare: whether in that state of the case evidence of the treatment of the minor plaintiffs by the Nawab as his sons, and acknowledgments made by him that they were his sons, did not afford such a strong presumption of marriage as to entitle the testimony of the witnesses who spoke to the marriage to credit which otherwise it would not have possessed (11-12). -----Concubinage-Clan proclinity towards-Evidence of --Effect of.

While recognising the force of a presumption of marriage arising from a permanent connection the court below held that in the case of a family like the one before it which paid scant regard to the matrimonial tie in the begetting of children from women of low caste, the presumption was so small as to be practically negligible. Held that no countenance could be given to the view of the Court below.

A Court of law would not on evidence of a clan proclivity in the clan to which the parties towards concubinage rather than marriage pronounce a view that there was a clan proclivity towards concubinage rather than marriage, and therefore that marriage and the legal presumptions in favour of it cannot be sustained. #### CONCURINE-WOMAN ORIGINALLY A.

No presumption in case of, merely on ground of lapse of time and propriety of conduct.

A woman, who was once a concubine, cannot be converted by judicial presumptions into a wife, merely by lapse of of time and propriety of conduct, and the enjoyment of confidence with powers of management reposed in her. The ordinary legal presumption is, that things remain in their original state (209).

A Mahomedan co-habited for many years with a Mahomedan woman who had been a prostitute and who lived in his house. At his death she claimed to be his wife, and called witnesses to prove an actual marriage which fact she failed to establish.

Held that, under such circumstances, a marriage between the two could not be presumed. (Sir James W. Colvile.)

The disinclination of the Mahomedan law to bastardize children has sanctioned the presumption from slight evidence of marriage or lawful consort (200-1), (Sir Montague E. Smith.) NEWAB MULKA JEHAN SAHIBA P. MAHUMED USHKURREE KHAN. (1873) Sup. I. A. 192 = 26 W. R. 26 = 2 Suth. 830 = 3 Sar. 244 = 8 M. J. 306 = R. & J's. No. 21 (Oudh).

IMPREGNATION-MARRIAGE AT TIME OF.

-Presumption of Law or fact.

If the subsequent marriage were adjudged to have relation back, by presumption of law, to the time of impregnation, then such a praesumptio juris would destroy altogether the difference between a law which admits to inheritance and a law which excludes from inheritance an ante-nuptial child. As a presumption of fact such a presumption is admissible, but then it must be subject to the application of the ordinary principles of evidence (117). (Sir fames W. Celvile.) A person who claims to recover property alleging himself to be the legitimate son of the last male owner of the property must bring forward satisfactory evidence in support

- Propriety of - Conduct of parties inconsistent with relation of husband and wife.

It was urged that every presumption ought to be made in favour of marriage when there had beeu a lengthened cohabitation, especially in a case when the alleged marriage took place so long ago that it must be difficult if not impossible, to obtain a trustworthy account of what really occurred. There would be much force in this argument—indeed, it would be almost irresistible—if the conduct of the parties were shewn to be compatible with the existence of the relation of husband and wife. In cases like the present conduct is a very good test, and a safer guide than the recollection or imagination of interested or biased witnesses (65). (Lord Managhten). ABDOOL RAZACK 2. There was, however, nothing to show that D was aware of the mutation proceedings. Nevertheless the Court below held that D; non-opposition to the mutation of names told against her case of marriage.

Held that the inference was not legitimate (189.90). The question was whether K was the wife of S deceased. A was born in the prostitute caste. Their Lordships observed:—Improbable it may have been, but S was undoubtedly under the spell of infatuation for K, and it is impossible to measure by standards of probabilities what might have been done in those circumstances by a man to secure for himself permanently and as of right the society of the woman he so greatly desired (534-5). - Effect.

It is no part of the law of India that to have lived and to remain behind the furdah is a necessary part of a lady's legal marriage or a conclusive evidential fact. It is a circumstance to be considered when the fact of the marriage is in issue. But that issue is to be determined on a broad conspectus of the whole situation, including of course the purdah item.

Exidence of Medical examination of girl 12 months after alleged date—Value of —Refusal of girl to submit to such examination – Inference adverse from—Propriety of.

The question was whether the appellant, at the time of her marriage with the respondent on 20th July 1907, had attained puberty and was an adult. Pending the suit, the respondent applied to the trial Judge in September 1908 for the appointment of a lady-doctor to examine the appellant in order to ascertain, first, whether the appellant had then attained puberty and was an adult, and how long she had been so; and, second, whether she was still a virgin or a married woman. The application was, on objection by the appellant, rejected by the trial Judge. The learned Judges of the High Court on appeal thought that the appellant's refusal to submit to that examination was very significantthat it showed the respondent's bona fides in the truth of his case; that he was suggesting a test which, if his case was false, would have put him out of court, that a lady doctor could have given most valuable evidence on those points, even without a minute examination as to whether the appellant was a virgin or not, and that a medical examination would have been of the utmost value.

On appeal their Lordships held that they were unable to adopt the view of the learned Judges of the High Court as to the critical nature of the test proposed. or the result of the examination or the significance of the refusal to undergo it.

The examination might have settled the question whether the appellant was, when examined, a virgo intacta or not, and to that extent might have tended to corroborate the respondent's allegation that he had lived and co habited with the appellant; but their Lordships utterly fail to see how, if she had been then found not to be a virgo intacta, it would necessarily have enabled any lady-doctor to have determined whether or not she had reached puberty twelve months previously; nor, indeed, how that question could have been determined with certainty even if she had in September 1908 been found to be a virgo intacta. -Alienation of immoveable property of infent -- Pencer

Under the Mahomedan law the power of dealing with immoveable property of a minor by way of pledge or sale is confined to the de jure guardians (87). A person who has charge of the person or property of a minor without being his legal guardian, and who may, therefore, he conveniently called a "de farto guardian" has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant; nor can such transferee if let into possession of the property under such unauthorised transfer, resist an action in eject ment on behalf of the infant as a trespasser. It follows that, being himself without title he cannot seek to recover property in the possession of another equally without title (92-3).

DE JURE GUARDIAN.

- Alienation by Powers of Limits on Movembe and immercable property-Distinction.

Under the Mahomedan law, the powers (of dealing with a minor's property) of even the de jure guardians are confined within legal limits. For example, whiist an executorguardian may "sell or purchase moveables on account of the orphan under his charge either for an equivalent or at such a rate as to occasion an inconsiderable loss, "dealings with his immoveable property are subjected to strict conditions. The reason for the restrictions is thus given in the Hedaya: "The ground of this" (the difference in the power of dealing with the two kinds of property) " is that the sale of moveable property is a species of conservation, as articles of that description are liable to decay, and the price is much more easily preserved than the article itself. With respect, on the contrary, to immoveable property, it is in a state of conservation in its own nature whence it is unlawful to sell it-unless, however, it is evident that it will otherwise perish or be lost, in which case the sale of it is allowed." In fact, the Mussalman law appears to draw a sharp distinction between moveable and immoveable property in respect of the powers of guardians, as will be seen from the following passage in Paillie's Digest: "With regard to the executor of a mother or a brother,-when a mother has died leaving property and a minor son, and having appointed an executor. or a brother has died leaving property and a minor brother, and having appointed an executor, the executor may lawfully sell anything but a'kar (immoveable property, including houses, groves, orchards. etc.) belonging to the estate of the deceased, but can neither sell the a'kar, nor lawfully buy any thing for the minor but food and clothing, which are necessary for his preservation. The executor of a mother has no power to sell anything that a minor has inherited from his father, whether moveable or immoveable. and whether the property be involved in debt or free from it. But what he has inherited from herself when it is free from debts and legacies, the executor may sell what is moveable, but he cannot sell a'kar. If the estate is involved in debts or legacies, and the debt is such as to absorb the whole, he may sell the whole, the sale of a'kar coming within his power; and if the debt does not absorb the whole, he may sell as much of it as is necessary to defray the debts, and as to his power to sell the surplus there is the same difference of opinion as has been stated above" (84-5). Right to be a-Mother -- Right of.

The father alone, or, if he be dead, his executor (under the Sunni law) is the legal guardian. If the father dies without appointing an executor, and his father is alive, the guardianship of his minor children devolves on their grandfather. Should he also be dead, and have left an executor, it vests in him. In default of these de jure guardians, the duty of appointing a guardian for the protection and preservation of the infant's property devolves on the judge as the representative of the sovereign. No one else has any right or power to intermeddle with the property of a minor, except for certain specified purposes, the nature of which is clearly defined (84). When the mother is the father's executrix, or is appointed by the Judge as guardian of the minors, she has all the powers of a de jure guardian. Without such derivative authority, if she assumes charge of their property of whatever description and purports to deal with it, she does so at her own risk, and her acts are like those of any other person who arrogates an authority which he does not legally possess. She may incur responsibilities, but can impose no obligations on the infant. This rule, however, is subject to certain exceptions provided for the protection of a minor child who has no de jure guardian (85-6). (Mr. Ameer Ali.) IMAMBANDI v. MUTSADDI.

Minor-Guardianship of.

-Mother-Person and property of minor-Right in respect of -Alienation-Power of.

Under the Mahomedan law the mother entitled only to the custody of the person of her minor child up to a certain age according to the sex of the child. But she is not the natural guardian; the father alone, or, if he be dead, his executor (under the Sunni law), is the legal guardian. The mother has no larger powers to deal with her minor child's property than any outsider or non-relative who happens to have charge for the time being of the infant (83).

MAHOMEDAN LAW-(Contd.)

Minor-Guardianship of-(Contd.)

When the mother is the father's executrix, or is appointed by the Judge as guardian of the minors, she has all the powers of a de jure guardian. Without such derivative authority, if she assumes charge of their property of whatever description and purports to deal with it, she does so at her own risk, and her acts are like those of any other person who arrogates an authority which he does not legally possess.. She may incur responsibilities, but can impose no obligations on the infant. This rule, however is subject to certain exceptions provided for the protection of a minor child who has no de jure guardian (85.6).

Even where the mother believes she is vested with authority as her husband's executrix, and in that belief purports to deal with the minor's property, a purchaser let into possession by her is liable to be ejected at the instance of the minor. Her own subsequent denial of authority does not affect the purchaser's position; but if the transaction is impagned by the rightful owner, namely, the infant, the onus is on the vendee to establish the foundation of his title, that is, that his vendor possessed in fact the authority under which she purported to act (92).

A pledge by her of the property of her infant child is not lawful, unless she be the executrix (of the father) or be authorised therefor by the guardian of the minor, or the judge should grant her permission to do so (92).

The power to sell cannot be wider than the power to mortgage, and a mother has, therefore, no power as de facto guardian of her infant children to alienate or charge their immoveable property. (Mr. Ameer dli.) IMAMBANDI v. (1918) 45 I.A. 73 = 45 C. 878 (893-7)= MUTSADDI.

Minor-Infant-Orphan.

-Acts which may be done for-Person in charge of infant-Alienation of infant's property by-Power of-Moveable and immoveable property-Distinction.

A fatherless child is designated in the (Mahomedan) law books an "infant-orphan." The Hedaya classifies the acts that may have to be done by an infant under three heads. It says: Acts in regard to infant-orphans are of three descriptions, 1viz., (1) Acts of guardianship, such as contracting an infant in marriage, or selling or buying goods for him, a power which belongs solely to the walee,or natural guardian, whom the law has constituted the infants' substitute in those points; (2) acts arising from the wants of an infant, such as buying or selling for him on occasions of need, or hiring a nurse for him, or the like, which power belongs to the maintainer of the infant, whether he be the brother, uncle, or (in the case of a foundling) the mooltakit, or taker-up, or the mother, provided she be the maintainer of the infant; and as these are empowered with respect to such acts, the wallee, or natural guardian, is also empowered with respect to them in a stil! superior degree; nor is it requisite, with respect to the guardian, that the infant be in his immediate protection; (5) acts which are purely advantageous to the infant, such as accepting presents or gifes, and keeping them for him, a power which may be exercised either by a mooltakit, a brother, or an uncle, and also by the infant himself, provided he be possessed of discretion, the intention being only to open a door to the infant's re-civing benefactions of an advantageous nature (86).

The examples given under the second head indicates the class of cases in which the acts of an unauthorised person who happens to have charge of a child are held to be binding on the infant's property. They also held to explain and illustrate the extent of such "de facto guardian's" powers. The permissibility of these acts depends on the emergency which gives rise to the imperative necessity for incurring liabilities without which the life or the child or his perishable goods and chattels may run the risk of destruction. For instance, he may stand in immediate need of aliment, clothing, or nursing; these wants must be supplied forth with. He may own "slaves" or live-stock; food and fodder must be immediately procured. And these imperative wants may recur from time to time. Under such circumstances power is given to the lawful guardian to incur debts or to raise money on the pledge of the minor's goods and chattles. And this power, in the absence of a de jure guardian, the law extends to the person who happens to have charge of the child and of the child's property, though not a constituted or authorised guardian (867).

There is no reference to the pledge or sale of immoveable property, as the power of dealing with that class of property is confined to the de jure guardians, and is treated in the Fatwai Alamgiri in a separate chapter (87).

It is to be observed that under the third "description" of acts that may be needful for an infant, a person in charge of a child, although not a de jure guardian, may validly accept on behalf of his ward an unburdened County, it being an act "purely advantageous" to the child, to use the expression of the Hedaya (87), (Mr. Ameer Alt.) -Continuance of, as a family business-Custom of-Validity of-Right based on custom-Enforceability of.

The suit related to the inheritance of a Mahomedan woman named B. The contest was between the brothers and sisters of the deceased. One of the sisters got into possession of the property of the deceased, and two suits were instituted against her, one by the two brothers, and the other by two of the other sisters, of the deceased for the recovery of their shares in her estate.

All the parties to the dispute belonged to the tribe of Kanchans. In that tribe the business of brothel-keeping and prostitution was carried on by families or communities who were re-united by adoption. B had left her own family to be adopted by one D, who was the head of another establishment of the same kind. She succeeded to D's property; and as D was dead, and her brothel had ceased to have any members except B herself, the plaintiff sisters alleged that on B's death her estate was distributable in equal shares among her brothers and sisters. The brothers contended that the ordinary Mahomedan law was applicable to the case, and that they were entitled to two shares each, while the sisters were entitled only each to one share. The defendant sister's contention was that as B had been adopted by D, no right of inheritance could devolve upon any member of her (B's) father's family either by Mahomedan Law or by custom.

The District Judge found that B had been adopted by D according to the custom of the Kanchans, and that according to that custom the effect of the adoption was to sever B completely from her own natural family. But he nevertheless held that the property of the deceased (B) was distributable according to Mahomedan law, his view of the law being that all the rules and customs of the kanchans aimed at the continuance of prostitution as a family business, that they had a distinctly immoral tendency, and should not be enforced in Courts of Justice. He therefore held that the whole transaction was null and void and that there was no severance of B from her family

Religious Endowment—Founder's wishes— Giving effect to—Duty of Court.

-Private and Public trusts-Objects of benefaction-Management of endowment-Distinction.

The Mussalman Law, like the English Law, draws a wide distinction between public and private trusts. Generally speaking, in the case of a waqf or trust created for specific individuals, or a determined body of individuals, the dazi, whose place in the British Indian system is taken by the Civil Court, has in carrying the trust into execution to give effect so far as possible to the expressed wishes of the founder With respect, however, to public religious or charitable trusts, of which a public mosque is a common and well-known example, the kazz's discretion is very wide. He may not depart from the intentions of the founder or from any rule fixed by him as to the objects of the benefaction; but as regards management which must be governed by circumstances he has complete discretion. He may defer to the wishes of the founder so far as they are conformable to changed conditions and circumstances, but his primary duty is to consider the interests of the general body of the public for whose benefit the trust is created. He may in his judicial discretion vary any rule of management which he may find either not practicable or not in the best interests of the institution (134). (Mr. Ameer Ali.) MAHOMED ISMAIL ARIFF E. A khankah is a monastery or religious institution where dervishes and other seekers after truth congregate for religious instruction and devotional exercises. It has generally been founded by a dervish or a suft professing esoteric beliefs, whose teachings and personal sanctity have attracted disciples whom he initiates into his doctrines. After his death, he is often revered as a saint, and his humble takia (or abode) grows into a khankah and his durgah (or tomb) into a rawzah (or shrine.) The khankah is usually under the governance of a sajjadanashin (the one seated on the prayer mat), who not only acts as mutawalli (or manager) of the institution, and of the adjoining mosque, but also is the spiritual preceptor of the adherents. The founder is generally the first Sajjadanishin, and after his death the spiritual line (silsilla) is extended by a succession of sajjadanishins, generally members of his family chosen by him or according to directions given by him in his lifetime, or selected by the fakirs and murids, and formally installed; and the income of the institution is usually received and expended by them. -Property dedicated to -Private property of Saijadanashin or-Distinction-Evidence.

The question was what properties were made waqf and dedicated to the religious purposes of a konkah. The properties with reference to which the question arose were (1) the shine of the saint, with its astana, the place of worship for the sajjada, and the surrounding hujras and gates; (2) the mosque, with its inner and outer court-yards, wells, tanks, hujras, and schools, and the maharwi bungalow; and (3) the remaining properties in dispute, such as the serais and langars.

Held, on the evidence, that the properties comprised in 1 and 2 were waqf, but that the properties comprised in item (3) stood in a different position and were private properties and partible. The plaintiff, the Sajjadanashin of a khankah or religious house, sued for the recovery of property inalienably appro-priated to the support of the khankah. The property was transferred to the defendant by the plaintiff's predecessor in office by way of conditional sale for the repayment of advances made to that predecessor. Subsequently, that predecessor, in consideration of a fresh advance made to him, purported to convey the property to the defendant absolute-

The judgment of the High Court, however, may mean that there is some rule of law to the effect that when public worship has been performed in a certain way for twenty years, there cannot be any variance from that way, in so much that the officiating minister who is guilty of a variance is ipto facto disqualified for his office. If that is the meaning of the judgment, their Lordships hold that it is not well founded in law. It cannot be that an Imam should be so bound by his own or his predecessor's previous practice in worship that he cannot make the slightest variation from it in gesture, intonation, or otherwise, without committing an offence. Even a code of ritual can hardly be so minute as absolutely to exclude all individual peculiarity or discre-tion; and here there is no code of ritual at all. If the principle above stated were allowed, it would follow that the practice of a single Imam might be so stereotyped as to become the constitution of the mosque, and that a single member of the congregation might, against the wishes of the rest, insist that no variation however innocent or however minute should be made. The question in each case of dispute must be as to the magnitude and importance of the alleged departure (68). (Lord Hobbonse.) FUZUL KHAN v. HAJI MOWLA BAAKSH. (1891) 18 I. In 1877 and on subsequent dates several purchases of properties were made by Cutchee merchants purporting to act on behalf of the Cutchee Mahomedans alone, but this practice was not consistently followed in later times, and though the Cutchees, being the richest members of the congregation, contributed individually in the proportion to their means considerable contributions were also made in the aggregace by the Hallaye and Sourtee Mahomedans. The administration of the affairs of the mosque was left mainly. if not entirely, in the hands of Cut-hee. Mahomedans because they were leading merchants but not because they belonged to that particular class of Mahomedans. In 1893, 93 Cut hees executed deeds forming themselves into a society, (which they subsequently incorporated) consisting of Catchee merchants alone and excluding the other classes for all future time from worship of the society and the management of the mosque, for which surpose they appointed a committee of management out of their own body with extensive powers of selling and letting properties other than the mo-que and its accessories. All the properties they declared to have vested exclusively in the society:

Held, that a portion of the congregation had no right by forming a new association to transfer all the property to the new association and exclude the rest of the congregation from membership and from participation in the management of the affairs of the mosque. The charter of incorporation obtained by the Defendants did not legalise their position, as the only association which could claim to be legalised was the congregation on whose behalf the mosque had been founded.

That the rule laid down in the French Civil Code (which is in force in Mauritius) that a religious community does not constitute a "civil person "and cannot without being authorised by the State hold property has not always been carried out to its logical conclusions and the Court will grant relief to aggrieved members of an unauthorised religious community against their fellow members.

That having regard to the existing law of Mauritius the Court in setting aside the deeds and the scheme of management set up by the Defendants could not proceed to frame a new scheme of management such as would be entirely free from legal objection. In the absence of any reason to fear that the restoration of the statu quo auto would lead to maladministration, this should be left to the congregation to settle amicably, and give effect to, by obtaining a charter of incorporation.

That in a suit by some of the aggrieved Hallayes and Soortees to set aside the deeds set up by the Defendants the Crown was not a necessary party as the law of Mauritius does not require that the Crown should be impleaded and the prerogatives of the Crown would not be affected by the decision in the suit.

Religious Endowment—Sajjadanashin.

APPOINTMENT OF SUCCESSOR BY.

Custom of-Proof of.

The question was whether the Sajjadanashin, or religious head, of a Mahomedan shrine had the right to appoint his successor in his lifetime according to the custom of the worshippers of the shrine. The plaintiff contended that the custom of the shrine permitted the diwan or religious head to appoint any one within certain limits as his successor.

Held, that the right of the Diwan to appoint a successor within certain limits was established both by documentary evidence and by the history of the shrine itself (6). (Lord Halibury.) SAVAD MUHAMMAD P. FATTEH MUHAM-MAD. (1894) 22 I. A. 4 - 22 C. 824 (332) = 6 Sar. 515.

The question was whether on the death of a Sajjadanishin of a khankah, his eldest son was entitled to be Sajjadanashin and manager of the khankah in preference to his uncle, the brother of the last Sajjadanishin. The evidence was clear that the former, who was the appellant before their Lordships, was formally recognised and installed by the pirs with the express consent and assistance of the latter, the respondent before their Lordships.

Held that it was not therefore open to the respondent to question the appellant's position as Sajjadanishin or his right to manage the mosque and the property attached to the khankah. (Viscount Cave.) MUHAMMAD HAMID P.

It was stated in the judgment of this Board in L. R. 48 I.A. 302 (323) that "ordinarily speaking the sajja" danishin has a larger right in the surplus income than a muttawalli, for so long as he does not spend it in wicked living or in objects wholly alien to his office. he, like the mahant of a Hindu math, has full power of disposition over it." But this does not mean that in every case the whole income from a khankah is at the disposal of the sajjadanishin; and it is plain from the authorities, as well as from the evidence in this suit. that at certain shrines the members of the founder's family other than the sajjadanishin are treated as entitled to share in the surplus offerings which remain after payment of expenses. Upon the whole, their Lordships think that the appellan, the sajjadanishin, must share the surplus offerings, after deducting all outgoings (including a reasonable remuneration to the sajjadanishin), with his uncle during their joint lives. Held that a deed called a wakfnama executed by a Mahomedan was not a hona fide dedication of the property, and that the use of the expressions "fisabilillah wakf" and similar terms in the outset of the deed, was only a veil to cover arrangements for the aggrandizement of the family and to make their property inalienable (39).

The leading clause of the deed contains no charitable gift except "in the manner provided by the paragraphs mentioned below." As regards the immovables, the only direction creating a trust for the objects mentioned in the opening sentence is that which is contained in the second paragraph. That trust is (after payment of "moosaref" expenses, and salaries), "to perform the stated reli-There is a great deal gious works according to custom." in the deed which is designed for the aggrandizement of the family property, and for keeping it perpetually in the hands of the family while the deed makes provisions calculated to make the family grow richer as the family property increases, there is not a word said about increasing the amount spent on charitable uses beyond the expenditure which was according to custom. The deed imposes no obligation on the grantor's male issue, or on any other person into whose hands the property may come, to apply it to charitable uses except to the extent to which he had himself been accustomed to perform them. If, indeed, it were shewn that the customary uses were of such magnitude as to exhaust the income, or to absorb the bulk of it, such a circumstance would have its weight in ascertaining the intention of the grantor. The facts, however, show that the charitable uses would not absorb more than a devost and wealthy Mahomedan gentleman might find it becoming to spend in that way (36-8). (Lord Hobbouse). SHEIK MAHOMED AHSANULLA CHOWDHRY D. AMARCHAND (1889) 17 I.A. 28=17 C. 498=5 Sar. 476 KUNDU.

——According to Mahomedan law, a gift is not good as a wakfnama, unless there is a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses at some period of time or other (177).

The document in this case is not valid as a wakfnama. It makes no gift of the lands in question, either immediate or ultimate, for religious or charitable purposes. The document professes to create a wakf, but, in reality, the legal heirs of the settlor are the only objects of his bounty. The lands are destined to his wives and children, and to the descendants of the latter in perpetuity, in the order and according to the shares prescribed by the Mahomedan law of succession, but subject to the limitation that none of them shall have the power of alienation by sale, gift, or mortigage (177-8). (Lord Watson). ABDUL GAFUR v. NIZAMUDIN. (1892) 19 I.A. 170 = 17 B. 1(3-4) = MUDIN.

The question was whether a settlement of property effected by deed was valid as a wakfnama.

trust was for some member of the family. The family was to be aggrandized by accumulations of surpluses, and apparently by absorption into the settlement of after-acquired properties; and no person was to have any right of calling the managers to account. Those possessions were to be secured for ever for the enjoyment of the family, so far as the settlors could accomplish such a result, by provisions that nobody's share should be alienated, or be attached for his There was no reference to religion unless it was the invocation of the deity to perpetuate the family name and to preserve their property, and the casual mention of unspecified religious purposes, etc., at the end of the document. There was a gift to the poor and to widows and orphans, but they were to take nothing, not even surplus income, until the total extinction of the blood of the settlors, whether lineal

Held, affirming the High Court, that the poor had been put into the settlement merely to give it a colour of piety, and so to legalise arrangements meant to serve for the aggrandizement of a family, and that the settlement was not therefore valid as a wakfnama (89.) 22 C. 619-6 Sar. 572.

-A deed will be a valid deed of wakf if its effect is to give the property in substance to charitable uses. It will not be so if the effect is to give the property in substance to the testator's family (23.4.)

On the terms of the deed in question in the case held that the property was not in substance dedicated to charitable purposes, but, on the contrary, was deficated substantially to the maintenance and aggrandizement of the family estates for family purposes, and that the deed could not therefore be supported as constituting a wakf (27.)

The deed closes, as it began, by describing itself as a deed of family endowment. The donor contemplates, it is true, that his own liberality to religious and charitable purposes shall continue in future generations; but this is only, as it turns out, to an uncertain and discretionary amount, and as an incident of the family endowment. When the deed is examined and collated, and its professions tested by its effective provisions, it proves to be what it calls itself, a "family endowment "pure and simple. Indeed, the theory of the deed seems to be that the creation of a family endowment is of itself a religious and meritorius act, and that the perpetual application of the surplus income in the acquisition of new properties to be added to the family estate is a charitable purpose. It is superfluous in the present day to say that this is not the law (26.) (Lord Robertson.) MAJIBUN-NISSA v. ABDUL RAHIM. (1900) 28 I. A 15 = 23 A. 233 (245 6) = 5 C. W. N. 177 = 3 Bom. L.  A deed purporting to be a wakframa executed by a Mahomedan lady and her husband began with recitals in which the intending settlors put their own construction upon the deed, and stated the objects for which they executed it and the effect they intended it to have. They said it was necessary "that sufficient provision be made for the thorough management of the entire property, and the imlak belonging to the executants, and the income and profits therefrom (which, taken as a whole, forms a small estate, so that the property itself and the principal wealth may always be preserved from all manner of partition, division, transfer, and succession, and the management thereof in whole and in part should remain for ever in the hands of one person, whereby our name and memory, and the pomp and dignity of the estate, may continue;" and that " the attainment of the above object is impossible except by a waqf."

As regards the operative clauses of the deed, the first and most general in its terms was paragraph 4, by which the executants "make waqf. . . in favour of our respective selves, and after the death of one of us (the executants) in favour of the surviving executant alone, and thereafter in favour of our descendants, generation after generation, so long as they exist, and in favour of the servants and dependants of the riasat (estate) aforesaid and in favour of the poor, the beggars, and the needy for ever in the manner detailed below.

The numerous clauses that followed were entirely in accord with the purpose stated in the preamble and embodied in the fourth paragraph. The bulk of the property was not affected by any religious or charitable trusts. The rules laid down were almost all expressly directed to securing the husband in the full enjoyment of the whole estate as long as he lived, to keeping that estate in perpetuity entire and inalienable under efficient management by a single person, to maintaining the dignity of the family, and to making provision for its members. The religious and charitable clauses were no exception. They even ancillary to the real purpose of the deed; they dealt with matters naturally incident to maintaining the dignity of the family, and their secondary character was further apparent from the fact that, while the deed purported to create the waqf as from its date, the religious and charitable trusts were not to become obligatory till after the deaths of both the executants.

Held, that the deed created no valid waof.

The name and form of a waqf are avowedly adopted in the hope of gaining legal recognition for a transaction which without them could have no validity. (Sir Arthur Wilson.) -There can be no doubt that the deeds of 1846 and 1868, which purported to create by gift a perpetual succession of interests for the aggrandizement of the family of the donors, were invalid by the Mahomedan Law and were not validated by the use of the term " wakf " or by the insertion of a remote trust for the poor; nor can the Act of 1913 (Mussalman Wakf Validating Act) be construed as validating deeds executed before its date. Out of an annual expenditure of Rs. 1,558 provided for by a wakfnama, Rs. 146 were to be applied for purely charitable purposes, Rs. 1,100 for the support of the settlor and his family, and Rs. 312 for the support of dependants. As the annuities fell in, the money allotted for them was to be divided by the muttawalli proportionately among the surviving annuitants, or be given in his discretion to some or one of them, or he was to give as much as he thought proper for purely charitable purposes. Even that provision was not applied unconditionally to the amount of Rs. 500 reserved for the settlor's own maintenance. Under the deed the settlor was to be muttawalli, and the office was confere red, on his own death, conditionally on his son, and failing that, on his son's descendants and afterwards on his malagnates and in failure of that line on the Anjuman at Amrit-

sar. The deed provided that while the office was held by the settlor's descendants or agnates, they were to have the annuity of Rs. 500 reserved for his own maintenance in addition to the muttawalli's salary of Rs. 240 provided for by the deed. The deed also conferred upon the settlor's son with his wife and children and upon some of the dependants a right to reside in the family house for life. The result was, that so long as there were agnates of the settlor in whom the office of muttawalli could vest, the muttawalli was to get an amount of Rs. 500 in addition to his salary of Rs. 240 as muttawalli, and the muttawalli was also to pay the descendants of the settlor's daughter, so long as there were any, annually Ks. 120 and so much of the remaining lapsed balance as he chose. He was not under any obligation to spend any of that sum for charity, though it was in his discretion to do so.

Held, that the properties had not been substantially dedicated to charity, and that the wakf was invalid.

If the Rs. 146 devoted to charity were necessarily to be increased as the life annuities fell in, there could be no question as to the validity of wakf (379.) (Sir fohn Wallis.)

--- Test-Validity of dedication in former case.

A deed of settlement executed by a Mahomedan before Act VI of 1913 came into force is a valid deed of wakf if its effect is to give the property in substance to charitable uses; it will not be so if the effect is to give the property in substance to the settlor's family. To determine whether any particular case answers this test all the circumstances existing at the date of the deed must be taken into consideration, such as the financial position of the grantor, the amount of the property, the nature and the needs of the charity, their probable or possible expansion, the priority of their claim upon the settled fund, and such like,

From the fact that the share of the income going to the family of the grantor is for the time being larger than that going to the charities it does not follow that the effect of the deed is so to give the property in substance to the family and that it is invalid as a deed of wakf.

The provision for charities in such a deed is not illusory merely because the deed does not specify the amount to be spent by the trustees on the charitable objects. In such a case the trustees are, at the least, bound, so far as the funds under their control will permit, to make such provisions for the charities as in the circumstances of the case a pious and charitable. Mahomedan would consider reasonable and proper; and if the trustees failed to perform their trust, the Advocate-General, or some other authority having control over the administration of charities could in a court of law compel them to do their duty and secure the due administration of the trust fund.

Held, that the effect of the instrument in question in the case was not to give the trust property in substance to the family of the grantors but to give it in substance to the charitable purposes named in it, and that the instrument was a valid deed of wakf under the Mahomedan Law. -Validity of dedication in latter case-Mussalman Wakf Validating Act of 1913-Effect of.

Under the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act of 1913 a wakf is not rendered invalid because it appears that the main object of the settlor was to make a settlement of his property on his family rather than to devote it to what are ordinarily understood as charitable purposes whereas, with regard to wakfs created before the passing of the Act, the test still is, was there a substantial dedication of the properties included in the wakf to charitable purposes? The test may sometimes be difficult of application, and in applying it the Courts, especially since the passing of the Act, will not be disposed to construe the provisions of the deed too strictly; but still the question must remain whether the properties included in the wakf have been substantially dedicated to charity, or whether they have been put into wakf by the setttlor with the real object of effecting some non-charitable purpose such as, for instance, that of making a family settlement of his property which would other wise be invalid as opposed to the Mahomedan law of succession (374). The law as laid down by the Board is, that the properties must be substantially dedicated to charity, not that the gift to charity should be substantial (380). (Sir John Wallis). BALLA MAL v. power, I divested myself of the connection of ownership and proprietary possession thereof, and placed it into the proprietary possession of Him who is the real owner, that is God, and changed my temporary possession known as proprietary possession into that of a 'mutwalli' (superintendent). From this day, the said property no longer belongs to me. It belongs to God. I am in possession thereof as a superintendent, that is, as a trustee for those who are according to the objects of the said wakf entitled to be, in any way, benefited thereby. I shall remain to be myself the superintendent thereof during my lifetime or so long as I wish to be so. After that one who shall be appointed by me shall be the superintendent. Such person shall continue to remain the superintendent after my death, until be is duly removed. The said superintendent or I or any other person, acting as a superintendent of the 'wakf' property, shall have all such powers of managing and protecting the said property as are possessed by an owner of property or were possessed by me before the 'wakf' provided that the said persons (superintendents)) shall have no right to claim ownership therein or do anything which may be inconsistent with the objects of the 'wakf', or to sell, mortgage or transfer it in any other way'.

Held, that the wakinama did not require registration under the Registration Act.

The argument that the deed requires registration depends for its validity upon the assumption that the trustees of the wakfnama stood in the same relation to the trust that trustees to whom property had been validly assigned would stand over here (England). Such is not the case. The wakfnama itself does not purport to assign property to trustees (231). If analogies sought between people holding similar interests over here and the trustees who would take charge of the property under the deed in question, the trustees would be more closely allied to receivers and managers appointed over property in this country than to trustees in whom the property is absolutely vested. A receiver and manager by virtue of his appointment has no estate in the property he is called upon to control; he possesses powers over it but not an interest in it, and the appointment of others in his place would by itself effect no transfer of ownership. The same thing is true of the trustees under this deed. They are superintendents of the property. The further use of the term "trustee" is apt to mislead until this distinction is borne in mind. They are trustees in the general sense that every man is a trustee to whom is entrusted the duty of managing and controlling property that belongs to another (232.) (Lord Buckmaster). -----Execution of-Capacity (sound disposing state of mind)-Proof of.

The question was whether a deed of wakf executed by H, a Mahomedan of the age of about 67 years, ought to be set aside upon the ground that his mind was so dominated by two nephews, who managed his business, that the transaction ought not to stand.

The Courts below concurrently found that H, when he executed the deed, was compos mentis, was of a sound disposing mind, and was in no way disqualified by his infimities from understanding what he was doing. H lived for some seven years after the date of the execution of the deed, and, during the rest of his iife, he not only never challenged the deed, but there was evidence that he recognised it, spoke of it as being in existence, and gave effect to it, he himself having been named in it as the mutwall during his lifetime. He did not denude himself of the whole of his property, but reserved a substantial portion for the maintenance of himself and his wife. He was himself childless. The deed was in no respect unconscionable, and was such as a reasonable and piously disposed Mahomedan might have chosen to enter into. The only thing that could be said against it, or that was said against it, in substance was that it conferred certain benefits upon those two nephews, because one was appointed mutawalli after H himself, and the other was appointed supervisor, and provision was made for their emoluments and expenses.

The Court below was of opinion that such provision was not at all unreasonable in amount or in character, and that as a matter of fact the deed was the disposition of H himself, made with an understanding mind, free from domination or coercion or undue influence by others. The Court below also found that he was not coerced or dominated in any way from that time to the day of his death.

Their Lordships, concurring in the findings of the Court below, affirmed its decision in favour of the validity of the gift. (Lord Sumner). MIRZA FIDA RASUL T. MIRZA YAKUB BEG. (1924) 51 C.L.J. 131 = 34 C.W.N. 813 = 31 L.W. 317 = 121 I C. 236 = A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 38 =

Wakf-Invalidity of-Rights based on-Relinquishment of, by contract for valuable consideration.

In 1846 and 1868 wakfs were created by the members of a Mahomedan family for the benefit first of the grantors themselves, " and then our descendants and children, generation after generation, then our relatives, and then the poor and destitute." In 1880 proceedings were taken by a number of people interested in the allowances made by virtue of the wakfs claiming that the wakfs were bad, Those proceedings were compromised by an agreement, dated 26-8-1881, which declared that the wakfs in question were valid and binding deeds, and that, save as provided by them the parties thereto had no claim to or interest in any of the properties in the possession of the Mutwalis under the wakfs. As a consideration for that arrangement on their part, an agreement was made providing for the payment by the mutwalis to each individual of a certain fixed allowance out of the income of the wakf property, thus substituting rights under a definite bargain for discretionary rights under the wakfs,

In a suit subsequently brought by persons, who claimed through the original grantors, for possession of the wakf properties on the ground that the wakfs were void and that the properties reverted back to the grantors, through whom they claimed, held, following L.R. 49 1.A. 153, that the agreements of 1861 was a bar to the enforcement of any such right.

The agreements of 1861 were contracts for valuable consideration. Those contracts were contracts that the parties through whom the plaintiffs in these proceedings claim, relinquished all rights that would arise to them if the wakfs were declared for any reason to be invalid, and in the place of such rights they obtained the benefit of an annuity fixed in a certain manner and secured by an agreement. The foundation of the judgment of this Board in 49 LA, does not in the least depend upon the consideration of whether the plaintiff who took those proceedings had rights as claiming through one of the original grantors of the wakf, or whether he was a person, as in fact he was who, though outside the class of original grantors, was none the less entitled to the benefit of the moneys which the wakf provided.

Held further that the plaintiffs were entitled to the beneat of a charge in respect of the annuity provided by the agreement of 1861, though they had not prayed for it in their plaint.

The right to the charge is a lesser right and the plaintiffs ought not to be excluded therefrom merely because they have asked for the larger right. (Lord Buckmaster).

HEIR OF-SUCCESSION TO OFFICE

- Precision in soakfnama for Direct heir disqualified-Next heir if entitled.

By a wakfnama a Mahomedan governed by the Shiah Law dedicated a part of his property to various religious purposes, including a mosque and a khankah and appointed M to be the mutualli or executor thereof. He also appointed his owa son A as a naib or deputy mutualli. The rule provided by the deed for the succession to the office of mutualli was in these terms:—

"In the event of slackness, negligence or discovery of misappropriation on the part of the mutwalli. I or my heirs shall be at liberty to dispense with the services of the said mutwalli and in case of death or dismissal of any mutwalli, if any heir belonging to the Imamia sect and competent enough to administer the wakf property be not left to the mutwalli, the naib mutwalli shall succeed him as mutwalli, and a naib mutwalli shall be appointed from among his (naib mutwalli's) heirs. In the event of no heir of the mutawalli and the naib mutawalli being found fit to manage the noulf property, selection shall be made of a competent person from among the heirs of me, the executant."

M, the mutawalli, died, and on his death his widow succeeded to the tauliat or governance of the taulif that had been entrusted to him under the tauk/nama. She died, survived by a daughter and a grand-daughter, the appellant. The daughter was found to be non compensation: The grand-daughter thereupon claimed the office of mutawalli. The plaintiff, a son of the executant of the tauk/nama, disputed her title, alleging that as the daughter of M, the direct heir to his widow, was insane and incompetent to be the mutawalli, the tauliat had passed to the line of the dedicator, and he instituted a suit to oust the appellant from the governance of the taukf.

Held, reversing the High Court, that, on the true construction of the wakinama, so long as the deceased mutawalli left a relation competent to inherit to him and otherwise qualified to administer the wake, the office of mutawalli could not revert to the dedicator's beirs and that, as the appellant was competent to carry on the administration. she was entitled to succeed to the office, and not the plaintiff.

Under the Mahomedan Law, if a daughter, who would be entitled to inherit, is excluded by disqualification. her daughter, if qualified, would inherit. And under the wakf nama it is only in the event of no heir of the mutawalli and the nails metawalli being found fit to manage the sould property, that selection is to be made of a competent person from among the heirs to the asserf. REMOVAL FROM OFFICE OF-GROUNDS.

Assertion of hostile title to property of wakf-Mismanagement of trust-Minappropriation of truit funds.

The law of India insists upon honest administration and management of a wakf or religious institution and upon conformity to, and not defiance of, the trusts for which such an institution is established, and a breach of those obligations is a ground for removal from office.

The setting up by a trustee of title to various portions, if not to the whole, of the trust property as his own personal estate may not of itself be a sufficient ground for removal of the trustee from office in a case in which there has been a mistaken impression as to right but no mismanagement of the trust. Such a case would be a unique case requiring very special proof.

Where the trustee had not merely set up his own title to the trust property, but had alienated various portions thereof, asserting in the sale deeds granted by him that the property was his own, and had besides neglected every one of the duties imposed on him as trustee and misappropriated the income of the trust property, held that the High Court was justified in having removed him from his office. Y continued in possession of the temple until 1850, when he died. The mohasa village was then resumed. In 1852 a grant was continued in the name of his son B. The evidence showed that B's own position was not that of an exclusive claim to the mutawalliship of that property and endowment as a wakf, but an allegation of joint ownership and possession with his brother, subject to respecting the conditions of the grant.

The master is one of a presumption, based on the policy of the law, but even considered as an inference from proved facts, the leave presumed is a thing which may well be regarded as likely to have happened. ——Permanent tenure at fixed rent—Grant by mutwali of—Lawful origin for—Presumption in hazi's lowe for— Propriety of.

In a suit by the mutwali of a wakf to recover from the defendants certain lands constituting the property of the wakf, the defendants' answer was that the lands were an ancient istimuari tenure, held for a long though indefinite time at a fixed rent and as heritable property, of the plaintiff's predecessors. In substance, the facts necessary to support that defence were proved, though the actual date and circumstances of the origin of the tenure were not. The tenure had been sold in Court auctions for arrears of rent, and had been described as an istimisari mekarrari tenure in 1859 and in 1902; rent receipts were produced for a long series of years, in which the tenure was also thus described; and it was proved that, in 1869, the mutualli of the day had sued unsuccessfully for enhancement of rent. The defendants contended that, by way of completing their title to a tenure actually enjoyed over so long a period of years, there ought to be presumed some lawful origin, and the existence of such facts, though unrecorded and forgotten, as would establish a lawful origin, and they urged that the Mahomedan law afforded such an origin in the exception to the rule that with the leave of the kazi an alienation by way of permanent tenure at fixed rent, otherwise unlawful, was permissible to a mutwalli.

Held, affirming the High Court, that the presumption of a lost and unrecorded permission of the kazi for the creation of the tenure of swiff lands, under which the defendants claimed to hold, was in itself reasonable and proper as the natural form, which a legal origin would take, and that that presumption completed the defendants' answer to the plaintiff's claim to possession.

The decision in L. R. 49 I. A. 54 applies in the present case, notwithstanding that it was a Hindu mntt with which that case was concerned. In principle the cases are in them selves analogous. In the language of the judgment there is nothing to suggest that the subject then under discussion was regarded as being in any sense peculiar or special. As a matter of public right it would be very undestrable to introduce purposeless distinctions between the law applicable in the case of one community and that applicable to another. the benefit of the settlor's family on the other. It also provided for the settlor and his heirs being mutawallis in their order. The then mutawalli of the mosque granted a mortgage of wakf property for purposes foreign to the necessary purposes of the wakf. In a suit by a succeeding mutawalli for a declaration of the invalidity of the mortgage and for recovery of possession of the property from the mortgagee, held that the mortgage was wholly invalid, and that no part of the wakf property was liable to be charged with the amount of the mortgage.

The mortgage cannot, for purposes of enforcement, be severed into two distinct charges, one declared for pious uses on one part of the property, and another and separate charge declared on another part for the uses of the mortgagor only. The property itself is not to be regarded as severable and chargeable according to the measure of the interest, which the settlor's family may have in the rents and profits of the whole. In such a case the only claim of the mortgagee, if any, is in the nature of a claim in persona, (Lord Sumner.) ABDUR RAHIM v. NARAIN DAS AURORA.

Mutwali or Sajjadanashin-Position and rights of. The manager of a wakf is the muttawalli, the governor, superintendent, or curator, or " procurator ". In the Mahomedan system no property is "conveyed " to a muttawalli in the case of a dedication. Nor is any property vested in him; whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interests regulated by custom and usage. Under the Mahomedan law, the moment a wakf is created all rights of property pass out of the wakif, and vest in God Almighty. The curator, whether called muttawali or Sajjadanashin, or by any other name, is merely a manager. He is certainly not a "trustee" as understood in the English system (312, 315). (Mr. Ameer Ali.) - Settlor declaring himself to be first mutwali - Effect

The property, in respect of which a wakf is created by the settlor, is not merely charged with such several trusts as he may declare, while remaining his property and in his hands. It is in very deed "God's acre", and this is the basis of the settled rule that such property as is held in wakf is inalienable, except for the purposes of the wakf. A similar view forms the basis of the inalienability of a Hindu math, and, if the settlor declares himself, as he is entitled to do, to be the first mutawalli or the first shebait that does not affect the fundamental principle, that the whole property is considered as having passed from him for the purposes which he has declared, and not merely such portion of it as will suffice to produce the part of the income which he has expressly dedicated to pious and charitable uses. Law governing questions of Mahamedan law-

In I. L. R. 20 C. 116 some doubts are expressed whether cases of this kind (in which the question is as to the validity of a settlement by way of wakf) are governed by Mahomedan law; and it is suggested that the decision in L. R. 17 I. A. 28 displaced the Mahomedan law in favour of English law. Clearly the Mahomedan law ought to govern a purely Mahomedan disposition of property (87). (Lord Hobbouse.) DISPOSITION IN EXCESS OF ONE-THIRD OF TESTATOR'S PROPERTY-CONSENT OF HEIRS TO.

A Mahomedan cannot of himself, by a testamentary writing, either curtail or defeat the legal interests of his heirs; and a Mahomedan will is therefore inoperative with regard to two thirds of the testator's succession unless it is validated by the consent of the heirs having interest (178). Time for giring.

By the Mahomodan law, the power of a testator to leave his property by will is limited to a one-third share. But a testamentary disposition in excess of one-third of the property of the testator is validated by the consent of the heirs given after the death of the testator. In such a case the will will have effect in its entirety. (Lord Shew.) HAKIM MOULVI MUHAMMAD MAHBUB ALI KHAN 2. BHARAT (1918) 23 C.W.N. 321 (324-5)= INDU. 53 I. C. 54 - (1919) M.W.N. 507.

HEIR-LEGACY TO-CONSENT OF OTHER HEIRS TO.

-Implied consent-Proof of.

The question was whether the eldest daughter of a deceased Mahomedan consented to a legacy being left by him to his son, who was another of his heirs. There was no proof of an explicit consent, but it was urged that consent ought to be implied from a certain transaction with regard to a loan and the interest upon it.

The lady's (eldest daughter's) husband being in need of money, the lady applied to her brother for the amount required. He offered to borrow it, but said that his sister should be surety for the loan. She was prepared to do that but demurred to paying interest. They borrowed money from a third party on a joint promissory note given by them in his favour, and the lady took from her brother a letter promising her that she should not have to pay the interest. The son alleged that he agreed to relieve her from paying the interest because she said to him that he was taking great advantages under their father's will-more than the Mahomedan law allowed, and therefore the least he could do was to pay that interest. As a matter of fact, however, the son debited the lady, as part of her share, with the interest on that loan.

-Necessity-Religious bequest-Bequest to son under color of.

The effect of the will of a Mahomedan was, in the first place, to declare E. his eldest son, his executor and representative, and to direct him to look after the Zemindary, and so forth. Then followed this passage: "I divide the remaining two-thirds now under my possession, uninterfered and unconcerned by any one else, into three portions. One portion to be laid out as the executor may think proper for the testator's welfare hereafter, by charity and pilgrimage, and keep up the family usage, namely, the expenses of the mosque and tazeeadaree of the sacred martyrs, and for the comfort of the travellers, the surplus amount to be appropriated by himself the executor." Then the will went on so say, from the other two-thirds "he shall keep every one by his good conduct and affection contended and satisfie I. It is also necessary for all persons having rights, heirs, an I friends connected with me to obey the said exe-cutor and consider him may representative." Then further "None of the heirs have power to sell or divide the landed property mentioned in the will."

It was contended that the will did not require confirmation, and that at all events so much of it as gave one-third to E for pious uses was not in contravention of Mahomedan law, and was therefore valid without confirmation.

Held, that the will, in its general scope, was in contravention of Mahomedan law, and, with respect to the limited contention, that it might be supported with respect to the devise of the one-third share, that that devise, considering the vague character of it, and that the beneficial interest was left to E after he had devoted what he might deem sufficient to certain indefinite pious uses, was in reality an attempt to give, under colour of a religious bequest, an interest in one-third to E, in contravention of Mahomedan law (309-10). INSTRUMENT AMOUNTING TO A.

---Intention to give-Absence of Declaration that another is to be representative of executant after his death -Effect.

A deed executed by a Mahomedan was in the following words:—" As I have divorced my wife, her son, Jet Sing, by illicit intercourse, is hereby disinherited, I have therefore adopted you." Then there followed after the signature these words:—" I have adopted Rana Jeswunt Sing" (the appellant) " to succeed to my property and title; no one shall interfere in this adoption. I have also made provision for all my wives by assigning a portion of land for their maintenance; they shall not be annoyed in any way, but considered as the mothers of Jeswunt Sing, and so treated and maintained. I have no son, and the heir to the estate is my brother Rana Chuter Sing, whose son, Jeswunt Singh, I have adopted."

The question was whether the deed was a will which passed any property to the appellant.

effect after the death of the donor (257-8).

There is no intention in the deed to give in words. The executant says he has no son, and he adopts somebody who may succeed. This son may succeed. Any other person may succeed if it is in the nature of a testamentary gift-

This case seems to be, in the very terms of it, almost similar to a case cited in Mr. Macnaghten's book, where the question was as to the effect of a document executed by a party "declaring his nephew to be his representative in proprietary right." The answer declares the document to be of no validity, "and cannot be available to confer any right of succession on the nephew, because it purports to constitute him the representative in proprietary right of the framer of it; in other words it declares him in general terms to have the right to the entire property belonging to the framer of the document after the death of the latter"; which is the only construction to be given to the words used here, "I have adopted Jeswant Sing to succeed to my property." Such a declaration does not fall within any description of legal obligation, and has, therefore, no validity as to the creation of proprietary right. It appears to their Lordships, therefore, that this document has no effect or operation whatever in giving any right of property to the appellant (258 9). (Lord Langdale). JESWANT SING JEE P. JET SING JEE. (1844) 3 M. I. A. 245= JET SING JEE. 6 W. R. (P.C.) 46 = 1 Suth. 153 = 1 Sar. 274.

-Letter written to general attorney.

The question was whether a letter written by a deceased Mahomedan to his general attorney amounted to a will. The letter by clause 10 stated: "You should not have the property given to (my) grandmother and paternal uncle's wife, but you should give the whole to my three sisters, who are my paternal uncle's daughters. You should see that they all get an equal share, and in the same manner as stated by me in paragraph 3."

Held, that the paragraph conferred a right on the three sisters in the property to take effect on the death of the writer of the letter, and, accordingly, that that letter acted as a will under Mahomedan law (223). (Lord Morris.)

-Wajib-ul-art.

Held, that a document, which was called a wwish-ul-urz, was not properly entitled to that name, but was rather a document in the nature of an administration or testamentary paper, by which the deceased indicated the way in which he should like his property to be enjoyed after his death. It was rather an attempt on his part to make a disposition of

MANAGEMENT-RIGHT OF-WILL GIVING-" ALWAYS AND FOR EVER."

-Equal to for life.

The will of a Mahomedan provided that the whole income of four annas share of his villages and estates should be devoted to charity, and the remaining 12 annas of the villages and estates and the whole of his other property should be divided into four shares and given to named persons. It then provided that H, one of his sons, should always be the manager of the four annas share devoted to charity, and that, after him, whoever from the descendants was just, virtuous, and capable of performing the duty, should be the superintendent and manager of that four anna share. It also provided that II should continue in possession and occupancy of the full sixteen annas of all the estates, villages, lands lying at different places, and moveable and immoveable property (collections from the villages), that all the matters of management in connection with the testator's estate should necessarily and obligatorily rest always and for ever in the hands of H, and that no heir and no stranger should at any time or period have power to take possession or to make any arrangements of his own regarding the estates. The will stated that, if any one of the legatees was disposed to transfer his or her share, he or she must offer to transfer to all of his or her shares in property; and that so long as the sharers were willing to take it, he or she must by no means transfer to others. In case any share was transferred to a stranger, the will stated that the stranger would not have any power to take any pessession or occupancy of the transferred property beyond recovering the profits which would be handed over to him, that the purchaser also should have no power or right of possession or occupancy over the property sold, and that the right of possession and management of II, or whoever might be his representative should not be disturbed,

The defendant, the eldest son of H, who had died previously, contended, in a suit by one of the legatees for actual possession of the share bequeathed to her, that, according to the terms of the instrument, he alone was entitled and competent to retain possession in order to carry out its provisions, which were to be carried out in perpetuity and for ever, and not for a limited period. The defendant also contended that the other heirs of H were not entitled to the management.

Held, that there was nothing in the provisions of the will to show that the heirs of H were to take his place the succession and management (165).

Per se the words "always and for ever" in the instrument are satisfied by limiting the interest which is there given to the life of H(163). (Sir Richard Couch.) MOULVI MU-HAMMAD ABDUL MAJID v. MUSSUMAT FATIMA BIBI.

PROBATE OF-GRANT OF.

Effect of -Two-thirds of estate not disposable by testator under Mahamedan Law-Heir's claim to-Maintainability-Esteppel.

A Mahomedan lady executed a will whereby she made a certain dispositions of property, and appointed the Administrator-General of Bengal to be her executor if he should be willing to act. By the will she confirmed certain gifts of property made by her and a release deed executed by her previously in favour of the respondent, who was her manager and confidential adviser. The Administrator-General, having been put in motion by the respondent and acting under an indemnity from him, applied in the High Court for probate of the will. The grandchildren of the testatrix as heirs entered a caveat; but, nevertheless, probate was ultimately granted of the will.

Pending the probate proceedings, the said grandchildren or their representatives in interest (appellants before their Lordships) instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose against the Administrator-General and the respondent alleging that the gifts and the release deed confirmed by the will were procured by the respondent by a misuse of his position of confidence, that they were consequently ineffectual and invalid to confer any rights on the respondent, and praying that the respondent should be compelled to account for the property which had thus come into his hands, and should be declared to be a trustee for the plain-earlier transactions contained in the will.

Held that the probate had not the effect of estopping the appellants from denying the validity of the confirmation which the will purported to contain of the transactions between the respondent and the testatrix during her lifetime, and particularly of the release alleged to have been executed by her (259).

Ss. 4, 59 and 88 of the Probate and Administration Act are incapable of being applied so as to give the probate in the present case the effect contended for. The appellants do not contest the title of the executor, though they show that, as to two-thirds of the estate, he is a mere trustee for them. They are not debtors of the estate, nor possessed of property belonging to it. They are not interested under the will, nor do they (necessarily) contest the validity of the will as a beneficial disposition to the legatees, and other persons claiming under it, of that part of the property which the testatrix was compelent to dispose of by will Their contention is that they are entitled to two-thirds of all the property of the testatrix which was not effectually disposed of by her in her lifetime. The release is now admitted to be ineffectual for that purpose, and, if so, the money and other property in the hands of the respondent was in the disposition of the testatrix at the time of her death. As she could not dispose of more than one-third part by her will, the confirmation of the release could not confirm the respondent's title in more than one-third, and the appellants are entitled to the other two-thirds. controversy is between the heirs claiming adversely to the will

The plaintiffs claimed under a will of B, Mahomedan

The plaintiffs put in a certain power of attorney executed by B to one K, to make what was called a wajib-ul-arz, and that document was to this effect; that a new settlement having been made of the property B made her appearance in respect of one Mouzah I, and she directed a wajib-ul-arz to be made in respect of that mouzah. She went on, however, to say, the wajib-ul-arz was to contain an alienatory clause to the effect: " After my demise A shall be the proprietor of one moiety of my property, and N, my adopted daughter, the proprietress of the other moiety."

It was contended that although those words of demise in themselves extended to the whole of the property of B, still the scope of that document must be limited to Mouzah I, to which, in the beginning, it particularly referred. But that document did not stand alone, and there was verbal evidence to the effect that B did express an intention that the whole of her property should be devised by will to the plaintiffs. The High Court held, differing from the Court below, that the testamentary disposition took effect with regard to the entire property of B, as it appeared from the evidence generally, consisting partly of the wajib-ul-arz and partly of the verbal evidence, that she intended to devise the whole of her property to the plaintiffs.

Their Lordships affirmed the High Court. (See Robert P. Collier.) MAHOMED ATTAF ALL KHAN P. AHMED BUKSH. (1876) 3 Suth. 235 = 25 W. R. 121 - Ba'd. 1. SETTLEMENT OR.

The Karnavan's limited power of alienation renders it improbable that he should have the power, without consulting other members of the family, of introducing strangers into the tarwad and making them the heirs to its property. Such a power may be essential to the preservation of the tarwad, when the last possible karnavan has been reached, but the possession of such a power by any karnavan who is not the last surviving head of his tarwad is unnecessary and unjust to those other members of the family who may survive him and become karnavans in their turn. In the absence of proof, it would be contrary to sound legal principles to hold that any such power was conferred by any alleged custom.

Effect of Division into Tavazhis only-Complete partition even between descendants of each branch-Evidence.

The plaintiffs and the 1st defendant were descendants from a common stock. The plaintiffs' case was that they were members of an undivided Mopla Tarwad governed by Marumakathayam law and that that Tarwad possessed considerable properties, including those in suit. The plaintiffs alleged that the 1st defendant was the senior and karnavan of the whole Tarwad, and that he had dealt with Tarwad property in fraud of the plaintiffs, and improperly alienated portions of it to the 2nd defendant and appellant.

The 1st defendant denied that the plaintiffs and he were members of an undivided Mopla Tarwad, or that he (1st defendant) was the senior and karnavan of the whole Tarwad, He. on the contrary, alleged that the branch of the plaintiffs and of the 1st defendant with seven others, had become divided as far back as 1837-38, and that each branch had been living separately and enjoying and dealing with the properties separately and independently of the other branches.

The three stocks to which descent was traced were three sisters who left descendants—B, K, and T. B. left four descendants, and T two; of K's descendants only three left issue. The litigation was concerned with the line of K.

The plaintiffs' contention was that the partition which was effected was only between the three branches of B, K, and T, and that the allotment made to the nine branches tracing from the several descendents was not by way of complete partition, but was merely a division for convenience of enjoyment. The case made by the defence was that there was a complete partition between the nine branches, and that thereby nine separate and independent shares were constituted.

Information-Prosecution instituted on.

If A receives information from others and acts upon it by making a criminal charge against B, the motive of his informants, or the truth, in fact of the story they tell, are to a great extent beside the point. The crucial questions for consideration are: Did the prosecutor believe the story upon which he acted? Was his conduct in believing it, and acting upon it, that of a reasonable man of ordinary prudence? Had he any indirect motive in making the charge? The Court ought not to confound the motives and action of the informant with the motives and action of the prosecutor, the truth, in fact, of the information conveyed to the prosecutor, and the motives of those who conveyed it, with the prosecutor's belief in what he heard and his prudence in acting on it (91). -Institution of prosecution bona fide but its continuance malicious-Effect.

The foundation of an action for malicious prosecution is malice, and malice may be shown at any time in the course of the inquiry. A prosecution, though in the outset not malicious, as having been undertaken at the dictation of a judge or magistrate, or, if spontaneously undertaken, from having been commenced under a bonn fide belief in the guilt of the accused, may nevertheless become malicious in any of the stages through which it has to pass, if the prosecutor, having acquired positive knowledge of the innocence of the accused perseveres malo animo in the prosecution, with the intention of procuring per nefas a conviction of the accused. The suit was for damages for malicious prosecution brought by the plaintiff who had been acquitted in a criminal case in which he was charged with having taken part in a riot. The defendants' names did not appear on the face of the criminal proceedings, except as witness s. It appeared, however, that they were directly responsible for any charge at all being made against the plaintiff, that they took the principal part in the conduct of the case both before the Police and in the Magistrate's Court, that they instructed the Counsel for the prosecution at the trial before the Magistrate that the plaintiff had "joined the riot," and that the charge was a false one to the knowledge of the defendants.

Held that the defendants were liable for damages. (Sir Andrew Scoble.) GAVA PARSAD TEWARI v. BHAGAT SINGH. (1908) 35 I. A. 189 = 30 A. 525 (535) = 4 M. L. T. 204 = 8 C. L. J. 337 = 12 C. W. N. 1017 =

In India the police have special powers in regard to the investigation of criminal charges, and it depends very much on the result of their investigation whether or not further proceedings are taken against the person accused. If, therefore, a complainant does not go beyond giving what he believes to be correct information to the police, and the police without further interference on his part (except giving such honest assistance as they may require), think fit to prosecute, it would be improper to make him responsible in damages for the failure of the prosecution. But if the charge is false to the knowledge of the complainant; if he misleads the police by bringing suborned witnesses to support it; if he influences the police to assist him in sending an innocent man for trial before the Magistrate-it would be equally improper to allow him to escape liability because the prosecution has not, technically, been conducted by him. The question in all cases of this kind must be who was the prosecutor?—and the answer must depend upon the whole circumstances of the case. The mere setting of the law in motion is not the criterion; the conduct of the complainant before and after making the charge, must also be taken into consideration. Nor is it enough to say, the prosecution was instituted and conducted by the police. That again is a question of fact. Theoretically, all prosecutions are conducted in the name and on behalf of the Crown, but in practice, this duty is often left in the hands of the person immediately aggrieved by the offence, who pro hac vice represents the Crown. MALICE AND WANT OF REASONABLE AND PROBABLE CAUSE—FINDING AS TO—FACT OR LAW.

-Concurrent findings-Privy Council's interference with.

Where, in a case in which the High Court, concurring with the Court below, dismissed a suit for damages for malicious prosecution on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to discharge the burden which lay upon him of proving that the defendant had acted maliciously, and that there was no reason or probable, cause for his action, the High Court granted a certificate that the appeal to His Majesty in Council involved a substantial question of law, hdd, by their Lordships that the only question involved was a question of fact on which there were concurrent findings and that the certificate must have been granted under a misapprehension.

It is quite true that according to English law it is for the Judge and not for the Jury to determine what is reasonable and probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution. The Jury finds the facts. The Judge draws the proper inference from the findings of the Jury. In that sense the question is a question of law. But where the case is tried without a Jury there is nothing but a question of fact and a question of fact to be determined by one and the same person. (Lard Macnaghten.) Pestonji Muncherji Mody v. In order to succeed in an action for damages for malicious prosecution, it is not enough for the plaintiff to prove that he was acquitted of the charge made against him. He must also prove that the defendant acted maliciously, that is from some indirect motive, and that there was no reasonable or probable cause for his action. (Lord Macnaghtm.) Principles of, same as English law. The Supreme Court held that a prosecution instituted without malice, and with reasonable and probable cause, cannot, under the Roman-Dutch Law, be held to amount to an act of aggression; that an animus iniuria in the prosecutor cannot, therefore, be inferred from the mere fact that the prosecution has failed and the accused been acquitted; that the burden of proving the existence of this animus injuria (i. c., malice) rests, under the Roman-Dutch Law as under the English Law, on the plaintiff in such an action; and that the principles of the two systems of law on the subject are practically identical. promise made in such circumstances was a void promise, nevertheless, the parties considered themselves as engaged persons; behaved as engaged persons, and it was certain that after the divorce proceedings had gone through and consequently the plaintiff became a free woman, the defendant brought her a ring and actually arranged the date on which they were to be married.

Held, in an action by the plaintiff for breach of promise of marriage, that the Courts below were right in inferring from the facts and circumstances of the case what really was in law a new promise to marry.

When persons fix a day for their marriage it may be inferred from this that there is a promise of marriage, and one is not bound to take it as a ratification of a contract which in itself is void, and which, therefore, in law cannot be ratified by anything that can be supsequently done. Probably in this country (England) we should say that, if a servant lived in a house appropriated to a servant, we should rather draw an inference from that that the possession of the servant was the possession of the master, but the customs and usages in the East Indies may be very different in that respect. -That unhappily expressed maxim (factum valet) clearly causes trouble in Indian Courts. If the factum, the external act, is void in law, there is no room for the application of the maxim. A Memon, as the word denotes, is a convert. The name Memon, however, has not been applied to all branches of Hindu converts, e.g., as in the case of the Khojas. There was a body which came from Sind and settled in Cutch, and these have been denominated as Cutchi Memons. Another body from the same place settled in the Halai Prant of Kathiawar, and these have been designated Halai Memons. Some of the Halai Memons pushed on to Bombay, where they have formed a community known as the Bombay Halai Memons. There was also an immigration from Bombay to Cutch, and the Cutchi Memons formed by themselves a separate community in Bombay from the Halai Memons. (Lord Duncdin.) KHATUBAI 29, MAHOMED HAJI ABU.

Nassapooria Memons settled at Mombasa.

- Succession to--Law applicable.

M, the succession to whose estate was in question, was a merchant who had settled at Mombassa, and was a member of the Indian sect known as Memons. His father was a Nassaporia Memon, who, about half a century before date of suit, with his wife and children, including M, migrated to Mambassa, where they settled. At Mombassa the succession to Mahomedans was in general governed by Mahomedan law, although it would probably be open to immigrants to prove that they had brought with them and preserved a custom establishing special law of succession. It did not appear that the Memons at Mombassa had at any time established any distinctive political or social organisation for themselves. Such organisation as had been formed appeared to have been formed mainly, if not entirely, for purposes of worship. There was no sufficient reason in what had been brought before the courts in the case for regarding the Memons who had emigrated from Cutch to Mombassa as other than a number of individual Mahomedans who had settled down among a people who were of their religion. It did not appear that those Memons had ever as a body claimed to be outside the system of law which naturally followed from that religion and so prevailed among the Mahomedans at Mombasa,

The appellate Court held that, if the respondent, who was the widow of the deceased and who alleged that the succession was governed by Mahomedan law, simply produced sufficient evidence to show that the custom of Hindu succession had ceared to be generally observed by the Memons in Mombasa, that was sufficient to entitle her to succeed, if the appellant, who was the son of the deceased and who reflied upon the Hindu law, failed to bring forward sufficient evidence in answer.

Held, affirming the appellate court, that the presumption which arose from the facts proved and the weight of exidence were both in favour of the conclusion reached by that court (41-2). (Viscount Haldane). ABDURAHIM HAJI ISMAIL MITHU P. HALIMABAI. (1915) 43 I.A. 35 =

Classes of —Cutch Memons—Nassapeoria Memons. Some four or five hundred years ago the Loannas, a sect of Hindus located in Sind, became converted to the Mahometan faith and took the name of Memons. A century or so later they migrated to Cutch, where they settled. There were two migrations. Those who first migrated and their descendants became known as Cutchee Memons, while those who migrated on the second occasion, and their descendants were called Nassapooria Memons. Both sets of migrants held to religious tenets and customs which are common to

Upon their conversion to Mahomedanism the Memons did not adopt the Mahomedan law as to succession, but retained their Hindu Law of succession as a customary law which remained binding upon the entire Memon community at Cutch. Oral evidence of Difficulty of Transaction of type usually recorded in writing.

There is always considerable difficulty when one of a number of mercantile transactions of a type usually recorded in writing has to be proved by word of mouth, for experience shows that in such cases the most honest and careful witnesses, recalling to memory only the result of the conversations, tend to give evidence of what they think they must have heard and said to produce such a result rather than to state from actual memory of them the very words that were used (130). owner of all the rights which might have coalesced, the substance of separation is preserved by the form of title not having been allowed to merge into the one name (492.3).

To apply this doctrine to the Indian joint family, when a joint family interest might be said to cover rights acquired to property by several individuals belonging to the family, but when the rights which might otherwise be merged are conferred by titles taken in the names of different members of the family, and thereby the means of articulate differentiation is continued as effectively as by the artifice employed in England of the setting up of a trust ad hee, then it appears that these circumstances are elements for consideration (493). A decree of the Privy Council declared that the respondent's father was entitled to possession with mesne profits of so much alluvial land as lay to the north and west of the red line in the map annexed to Her Majesty's order in Coun-

On an application by the respondent, who had succeeded his father, for fixing the amount of the mesne profits as per that decree, it became necessary to determine the quantity of land that had been under cultivation from 1272 to 1280. The High Court found that in 1280 an entire area of 1079 bighas was under cultivation, and held that, as it was in the power of the defendants (judgment-debtors) by production of jumma-wasil-laki papers and other papers usually kept in the Zemindar's scriphts to show the gradual increase in the cultivated area from 1272 to 1280, and they had not given any evidence on that point, it ought to be presumed against them that the entire 1079 bighas came under cultivation from the beginning of 1272.

Held that the presumption made by the High Court was, in the circumstances of the case, a proper one (544).

The defendants appear to have endeavoured throughout the proceedings to defeat the execution of the decree for mesne profits. Ly not producing evidence which they had power to produce (544). (Sir Richard Couch.) MAHABIR PERSHAD P. RADHA PERSHAD SINGH.

-Building creeted by defendant-Increase in income of plaintiff's land due to-Profits of land in case of-Assessment of.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the appellant to recover possession of certain land, and for mesne profits and damages. The land was originally the property of the appellant, but was at the date of suit in the possession of the Darbhanga Municipality, represented in the suit by their Chairman, the respondent. While the appellant was a minor and his estate was under the management of the Court of Wards, the land in question was ostensibly taken by the Government, at the expense of the Darbhanga Municipality, under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. It was found in the suit that the land had not been validly acquired by the Municipality under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, and that the appellant was therefore entitled to recover possession of the same, The question arose as to the amount the appellant was entitled to for mesne profits, and as to the proper measure of such

The District Judge took the income for the three years, 1883 to 1885, and set that off against a sum of Rs. 5,000 which it was admitted by the plaintiff he was bound to pay to the defendant for the money expended on the land. That income was, however, received by the municipality after the expenditure of a considerable sum of money on the land.

Held that that was not the measure of the damages sustained by the plaintiff by being out of possession, and that the rent which could have been obtained for the land if the plaintiff had been in possession during those years was the fair measure of the mesne profits and that that sum only must be deducted from the Rs. 5,000 (97).  Cultivation of land by defendant himself—Land let out by him to others—Distinction between cases of—Rental value true basis in latter case.

The rental value of the land would ordinarily be the proper basis of calculating memor profits where the person charged had merely let the land out to others. In such a case the rent that be received, if there was no evidence that a higher rent could "with ordinary diligence" have been obtained, would be the measure of the profits for which he would be liable. But when the wrong-deers cultivated the land themselves, the definition of "Mesne Profits" in S. 2 (12).C.P.C. clearly makes the cultivation profits the primary consideration. (Six George Lourender.) - Defendant not in possession and not in receipt of profits during period in question-Liability of-Basis of-Actual and not possible receipts.

The plaintiff, having been dispossessed by the manager under the Oudh Talookdaa's Relief Act of 1870, sued for and obtained a decree for possession against the manager. Thereupon he instituted a fresh suit against the manager for the mesne profits of the said property. Pending the suit, the estate was released from management and handed over to the respondent, and he was brought on record in the place of the manager.

On a question arising as to whether, as regards mesne profits, the respondent was liable only for sums which had actually been received, or was liable also for sums which might have been received except for wilful default, held that he was liable only for the sums which had actually been received (93).

The respondent did not receive the mesne profits himself. He came into possession of the estate upon its being released by the Government. Whatever case might have been made against the manager of the estate, there is nothing to show that the respondent could be charged with anything more than was actually received by him (93). - Defendant's actual or reasonably possible profits and not plaintif's possible profits.

The true basis on which mesne profits ought, under S. 2 (12) of C. P. C., to be computed is what the person in possession received or might. Land, which was capable of producing more profitable crops, was, in fact, planted by the wrong-doers with indigo, an inferior crop, for their special purpose. In ascertaining the mesne profits payable by them the courts in India calculated the profits upon the basis of the more profitable crops which the land was capable of producing.

Held, affirming the Courts below, that the basis of calculation adopted by them was correct.

Possible receipts—Assessment on batis of—Propriety—Evidence of actual receipts with held by defendant. Under the Explanation to S. 211 of the Code of 1882 Mesne profits of property include profits which the person in wrongful possession might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom.

Where, therefore, a decree for possession awarded to plaintiff mesne profits for the period of possession to be ascertained in execution, and in execution, the subordinate Judge awarded to plaintiff profits which, with ordinary diligence the judgment delstor might have collected, becase the judgment-delstor would not adduce evidence to show how much was realised by him by way of profits and no other data were available for ascertaining the same, held that the Subordinate Judge rightly apprehended the proper object of an inquiry into mesne profits, and that the High Court was wrong in holding that he was bound to ascertain the actual assets that is, the actual amount of money or value which reached the hands of the judgment-delstor (120-1).

Even if evidence of actual receipts had been produced, it might still have been necessary to inquire into the possibility of larger receipts by ordinary diligence, because the judgment debtor might have deliberately let out the lands at a rate lower than the ordinary one. The Subordinate Judge's order does not charge the judgment-debtor with wilful default. Indeed, if it did it would adopt a principle more favourable to the judgment-debtor than that of the Code; for there may be values recoverable by ordinary diligence which yet it would not be wilful default not to recover. Wilful default is charged against persons in rightful possession though accountable for their dealings with the property. The judgment-debtor in this case was wrongfully in possession. And prima facie it is fair to infer that a person in possession of land may by ordinary diligence get rent for it according to the prevailing rates for such lands, and that the true owner wrongfully disposessed has been a loser by that amount (119.20). ...... Opposite party-Assessment by, for years immediately preceding those in question-Admissibility and value

In a case in which the question was what was the precise amount of the net profits of a village in the years 1823 and 1824, the Court of Sudder Adawlut was dissatisfied with the great mass of evidence on both sides, and was of opinion that the evidence was altogether unsatisfactory and not to be depended upon as to the actual produce. It appeared, however, that for two years immediately preceding the years, the profits of which were in question, the defendant himself or those under whom he claimed had claimed profits in respect of that very village at a certain rate and had heen awarded profits at that rate. The Court of Sudder Adawlut took that rate as the basis of its calculation and adjudged to the plaintiff something less than what would be due upon that calculation.

Held, that whatever the value of the evidence afforded by the defendants' calculation for the preceding years would have been if there had been any contradictory evidence, or if there had been any circumstances to show that the value of the years in question was less than that of the preceding years or any other circumstances, the defendant's calculation for the preceding years was evidence upon

The question was what was the precise amount of the net profits of a village in two years recoverable by the plaintiff from the defendant. Two witnesses were examined for the defendant who stated, what the assessment of those two years actually was. The first witness stated that he was the Curnam of the village in question. In fact, however, his younger brother, and not he, was the Curnam who made out the account. And it appeared that the witness's testimony was based upon the fact that he used to see the accounts maintained by his brother. The accounts themselves were not produced, and the parties who made the account were not examined, though the defendant had an opportunity of doing both.

Held that the restinony of the witness was not receivable as evidence of the actual amount of the assessment (81-2). The testimony of the other witness was based upon the fact of his having talked over with the person keeping the accounts. The accounts themselves could have been produced and the person who kept them examined. Held that his testimony also was not receivable as evidence of the actual amount of the assessment (81-2).

In a case in which the decree directed the wasilat awarded to the plaintiff to be ascertained by local inquiry, an inquiry was instituted by the Judge of the District. The Judge made an order that the judgment-debtor should appear before him, and produce his jumma-wasilbaki papers which would shew the amount of his receipts and expenditure with regard to the suit property, and would be the best possible evidence, if trustworthy, which could be obtained, and worth more than the examination on the spot of any numher of ryots. Against the order of the Judge assessing the wasilat on the basis of such inquiry the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court; but he made it no ground of appeal that the Judge ought to have gone to the spot, or have sent a Commissioner to the spot, or that he ought to have sat on some portion of his land. He made no objection of that kind, and it appeared that he attorned, as it were, to the jurisdiction, and sent in certain papers (which were deemed highly unsatisfactory), thereby taking his chance of a decision in his favour by the Judge.

In his appeal to the Privy Council, the judgment-debtor for the first time raised the contention that, inasmuch as the decree directed the calculation to be made by a local inquiry, and there had been no local inquiry the judgment of the court below could not stand.

Held that under the circumstances it was too late for the judgment-debtor to object to the inquiry being conducted as it was (208-9). (Sir Robert P. Collier.) FAKHARUD-DIN MAHOMED AHSAN CHEWDHRY P. OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF BENGAL. (1881) 8 I.A. 197 =

The Judge made an order that the judgment-debtor should appear before him, and should produce his jumma-wasilhaki papers, which would show the amount of his receipts and expenditure with regard to the suit property, and would be the best possible evidence, if trustworthy, which could be obtained, and worth more than the examination on the spot of any number of ryots.

A person who obtained a decree for possession in the Sub-Court, was by that Court given possession upon her providing security to restore the mesne profits to the exten of one lakh of rupees. The appellants gave their security by executing a bond charging immoveable property to the extent of that sum.

Held that the appellants need not be parties to the assessment of the mesne profits and damages payable under the bond.

The assessment of damages is one to be made once and for all as between the parties to the suit. The surelies are bound by that assessment and have no right to question it. It is possible that in an extreme case the court to which application was made to enforce such an instrument of suretyship, if it thought that there had been no real trial of suretyship, if it thought that there had been no real trial of the amount of the mesne profits might, upon terms, admit the sureties to question the amount; but it would be an extreme case, (Lord Phillimore.) ____ Jurisdiction-Discretion.

The plaint in a suit for possession and mesne profits did not pray for interest on such profits. The trial Court gave a decree for possession and mesne profits for 11 years, but said nothing about interest on the mesne profits decreed. In appeal, that decree was modified, as regards the period for which the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits, by reducing it to 6 years prior to the suit, but even that decree said nothing about interest on the profits. The appellate decree was affirmed by the Privy Council, the Order in Council stating that the Judges of the court below were to take notice of the said Order in Council, and to govern themselves accordingly.

In execution of the said Order in Council, the courts in India held that the plaintiff was entitled to interest on the amount of the mesne profits at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the original decree to that of the execution of the Order in Council. In doing so, they followed the practice obtaining in those courts of awarding interest on the mesne profits, even though the decree was silent as to the same.

Held that the courts below acted rightly, in awarding interest, and that for that purpose no distinction could be made as to interest anterior to the time when the arrears were reduced, from those of eleven years, to those of six.

The question in this case is whether a person from whom a fixed ascertained sum of money adjudged to be due, has been, without any just ground, withheld, shall be allowed interest against his debtor for the time subsequent to the adjudication. Abstract justice certainly is in favour of the claim

S. 2 (12) of the Code imports into the expression "mesne profits" the addition of "interest on those profits". A decree for mesne profits, which says nothing about interest, therefore, carries interest on such profits.

Mesne profits being in the nature of damages, the Court, no doubt, has jurisdiction to give or refuse interest on such profits as it chooses according to the justice of the case. In a suit for mesne profits against several defendants, the decree for such profits becomes operative only when it ascertains the amount of such profits and determines the question whether the defendants are liable jointly or severally in respect of their wrongful possession. A decree merely finding that the defendants are accountable for such profits and declaring their liability in general terms is not such a decree (158). (Lord Watson.) MAHARAJA KADHA PARSHAD SINGH v. In 1856 appellant obtained a decree (confirmed on appeal in 1870) against several persons, of whom the respondent's ancestor was one, whereby the defendants in that suit were directed to deliver possession of the suit property to the appellant and were declared liable for mesne profits. The decree did not, however, ascertain the amount of such profits, and did not determine the question whether the defendants were jointly or severally liable for the same. In 1877 the first Court issued an order fixing the amount of mesne profits payable to the appellant and made a decree for the same jointly against all the parties whose names then appeared as defendants to the suit. Respondent's ancestor had died in the interval, but the respondents were not brought on record as his representatives.

Held that the only executable decree for mesne profits was that of the year 1877, and, as the respondents' ancestor had died previously, and the respondents were not made parties to the suit in his place, they were not bound by the same (157-8).

An operative decree, obtained after the death of a defendant, by which the extent and quality of his liability,

In a suit for possession and mesne profits the decree of the Court below was general, and awarded mesne profits against all the defendants. There was, however, no evidence that defendants Nos. 5 and 6 dispossessed the plaintiff or ever had possession of any part of the suit property. The plaintiff did not in his plaint even allege that defendants 5 and 6 dispossessed him or show any grounds for making them parties to the suit, except for the purpose of binding them as to the title. He merely stated that he had been dispossessed by defendants 1 and 2.

Recovery of Mode of Execution or reparate swit.

On the construction of S. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, all the High Courts in India had accepted as settled law these propositions: first, that where the decree is silent touching interest or mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit, the Court executing the decree cannot under the clause in question assess or give execution for such interest or mesne profits; and secondly, that the plaintiff is still at liberty to assert his right to such mesne profits in a separate suit. The alleged consensus of the Indian Courts being thus established, their Lordships accepted the construction of the Indian Courts as settled law, irrespective of their opinion upon the construction of the section had the question been res integra (228). (Sir James W. Colvile.) SADASIVA PILLAI v. RAMALINGA PILLAI. (1875) 2 I.A.219 = 15 B.L. R. 383 = 24 W.R. 193 = 3 Sat. 519 = 3 Suth. 190.

——Recovery of, in execution—Right of—Bond by judgment debtor consenting to such recovery as condition of stay of execution—Effect of.

The plaint in a suit for possession claimed mesne profits only for the year prior to the institution of the suit, but did not claim mesne profits for the subsequent years. The final decree of His Majesty in Council in the said suit also awarded mesne profits only for the year before the suit, and was silent as to the profits accrued since the institution of the suit. Pending the appeals to the Sudder Court and the Privy Council the successful plaintiff presented applications to the court of first instance claiming, in addition to the mesne profits specifically decreed to him, a certain sum as being the profits of the years subsequent to the suit, and praying for immediate execution in default of security being furnished by the defendant for the subsequent profits claimed. On all those occasions, the defendant executed security bonds by which, in consideration of his being allowed to remain in possession pending the appeals, he undertook to pay subsequent mesne profits for the years which they respectively covered, and agreed to their being realised in proceedings in execution of the decree in the event of default on his part to pay the said profits ultimate-The bonds were executed in favour of the court. The plaintiff succeeded in the appeal to the Privy Council also in that suit. Thereupon, he presented an application in execution praying for the recovery in execution of the subsequent mesne profits covered by the said security bonds, together with interest thereon.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the same in proceedings in execution, and that S. 11 of C. P. C. of 1861 was not a bar to his right to do so (233).

By the security bonds in question the defendant did come under an obligation to account in the suit in which the decree under execution was passed for the subsequent mesne profits, which was capable of being enforced by DECREE FOR-AFFIRMANCE ON APPEAL OF.

- Operative decree in case of - Date from which profits recoverable in case of.

Two brothers entered into an agreement of compromise, whereby in substance the elder brother took ten-sixteenths of the ancestral property, and the younger six-sixteenths. The younger brother disputed this compromise on various grounds; but it was affirmed by the Court on 2-9-1829, by a judgment which was in these terms: " It is ordered that the deed of compromise and release be admitted, that the case be struck off the file of this Court, and that the parties conform to these stipulations. The Court on becoming acquainted with it shall enforce the observance of the same on the refusing party." This decision was affirmed on appeal on 4.7.1832 by a judgment which was in these terms : "Ordered that the appeal be dismissed, and that the decision passed in the Provincial Court of appeal " (Court below), dated 2.9-1829, be affirmed; that should the appellant, (the younger brother) " agreeably to the deeds of compromise, not have received possession of his share, he be put in possession of the same on the execution of the decree

In a suit subsequently instituted by the younger brother for the recovery of the mesne profits of the property decreed to him, the question arose whether he was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the decision of the first court in 1829, or from 1832, the date of the decision in appeal. Held, reversing the High Court that the younger brother was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the decision of the first court.

One of the stipulations in the deed of compromise and release was that the elder brother, who was in possession of the property, should relinquish to his younger brother sixsixteenths. It therefore appears to their Lordships that the direction (in the first Court's judgment of 1829) to conform to these stipulations is a direction, though possibly an informal one, that the younger brother should be put in possession of that property. The decree in appeal must not be taken as establishing for the first time any new right of either of these parties, but as simply affirming, with an explanation, the former decree. The rights of the parties, therefore, depend upon the former decree, and it is the former decree which is effective, and which had to be executed. The elder brother, after the first decree, receiving as he did all the rents and profits of the property, received the rent of six-sixteenths of it (the younger brother's share) for the use of his younger brother, and that he is bound to account to his brother for those rents and profits (35-6). DECREE FOR—AFFIRMANCE ON APPEAL OF—

Where a decree in ejectment awarded future mesne profits to plaintiff and that decree was ultimately affirmed by the Privy Council, nothing however being said by their order as to such profits, held that the order of the Queen in Council, speaking with the language of the original decree, clearly carried all profits up to its own date and that, under S. 211 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, the plaintiff was entitled to profits until the delivery of possession to him or until the expiration of three years from the date of the order of the Queen in Council (whichever event first occurred).

The decree to be executed is, not the original decree, but the Queen's order, which, by affirming the original decree, has adopted its terms and has carried on their effect down to a later date. All that the Courts below had to do, and all that this Board has now to do, is to construe the Queen's order, and to carry it into execution. (Lead Hobboure.) RAJA BHUP INDAR BAHADUR SINGH P. BIJAI BAHADUR SINGH. (1900) 27 I. A. 209 (214-5) = 23 A. 152 (157-8) = 5 C. W. N. 52 = 2 Bom. L. R. 978 = 7 Sar. 788 = 10 M. L. J. 290.

A suit for possession and mesne profits was decreed, the decree awarding mesne profits from its date to date of possession and directing the profits to be ascertained in execution. That decree was appealed against, first to the High Court, and then to His Majesty in Council, and was affirmed by both those courts. The plaintiff obtained possession only after the decree of His Majesty in Council.

The question arose whether the decree-holders were entitled to mesne profits from the date of the first Court's decree or only from the date of the decree of His Majesty in Courcil.

Held that they were entitled to mesne profits from the date of the first Court's decree to the date of their obtaining possession.

-Right to.

The judgment on appeal, in a suit for possession of property and mesne profits, was as follows:—" The plaintiff is declared entitled to possession of the land mentioned in the kabinnama, with wasilat from the commencement of Srabun 1267; the wasilat to be ascertained by local inquiry". The question was whether, on the right construction of that decree, the plaintiff was entitled to wasilat up to the date of delivery of possession, or only up to the date of the commencement of the suit. The plaint in the suit was susceptible of either interpretation, viz., either that it claimed wasilat up to the date of delivery of possession, or that it claimed the same only up to the date of the suit. Under S. 196 of C.P. C. of 1859, then in force, the Court had power to award wasilat up to the date of delivery of possession.

Held that the more reasonable construction of the decree —which undoubtedly might have been clearer—was that the Court, with a view to carrying out the object of the Legislature, namely, the prevention of unnecessary litigation and multiplication of suits, intended in that suit to give, with possession, that wasilat which was by law claimable up to the time of possession (207).

Wasilat by law is demandable up to the time of possession; and the question is whether the Court intended to

According to that interpretation, the court could not have intended to give him wasilat up to the time of the decision in appeal, which was three or four years after the commencement of the suit. —— Plaint—Body of — Claim in general manner in-Schedule to plaint—Claim in, for shorter period—Effect.

In a suit brought by a Mahomedan lady against her husband for the purpose of obtaining possession, together with mesne profits, of certain lands, she described her suit as brought "to obtain possession of the Zemindaries and putal talooks mentioned in the schedule given below, and the mesne profits thereof "—claiming mesne profits in a very general manner. Subsequently valuing the suit, and for that purpose describing her claim in the schedule, she spoke of her claim for mesne profits for the period of dispossession, that is to say, some eighteen months before the institution of the suit, as amounting to Rs. 48,400.

On a question arising as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to wasilat or mesne profits up to the time of the delivery of possession, or, as contended by the defendant, only up to the time of the commencement of the suit, held that the plaint was open to the construction that the plaintiff intended to claim wasilat up to the time of delivery of possession, although for the purpose of valuation only so much was valued as was then due (202, 206). Having regard to the circumstances of the case, and, among them, the very great delay, which had not been thoroughly explained, in the prosecution of the appeal to the Privy Council, their Lordships thought that it was enough that the plaintiff should have a decree for interest upon the mesne profits to be calculated from the commencement of the suit (38-9). Where an order awarding mesne profits directed the payment of interest on such profits at the rate of 1 per cent, per mensem to be calculated at the end of each year, held, that the interest awarded was not compound interest so as to admit of interest being charged upon the rests, but interest calculated per mensem but payable per annum (260-1).

In this country interest is paid half-yearly or yearly, but in India it is customary to pay the interest at the end of each month at the rate of 1 per cent. per month, and the words of the order might mean to exclude what is otherwise generally meant, the payment of interest monthly: the Court decrees the payment yearly (260-1). The question was as to the meaning of the term " mesne profits " in a decree for possession of lands and for the mesne profits.

Held that the amount which might have been received from the lands, deducting the collection charges, was the profits of the land, and that the loss of interest year by year upon those profits was merely damages sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of his having been prevented from receiving the profits as they became due (5). EXECUTION - ASCERTAINMENT OF MESNE PROFITS IN.

In a suit to recover possession of certain lands together with a sum being the estimated amount of mesne profits from 1st Assin 1273 to 20th Srabun 1276, the 1st Court made a decree for the plaintiff to recover possession of the lands, and also the mesne profits, not from a time previous to the date of the suit, as claimed, but from the date of the suit to the date of recovery of possession, to be ascertained by inquiry at the time of the execution of the decree, with interest from the date of the ascertainment at 6 per cent, per annum. On appeal the High Court amended the decree of the Lower Court by giving the mesne profits from the 1st Assin 1273, to the 20th Srabun 1276, in addition to those which had been awarded by the Lower Court. The High Court also stated that the mesne profits were to be recovered with interest from the date of ascertainment. So that, according to both decrees, the mesne profits were to carry interest only from the date of ascertainment.

In executing the decree, the 1st Court ascertained what was the rent which might have been obtained from the estate, treated that as the mesne profits of the estate, and added no interest year by year upon the amount. On appeal the High Court held that the court below was wrong in not having allowed interest upon the rental year by year, upon the ground that the decree holder was entitled, not merely to the rental less the collection charges, but also to interest thereon year by year as compensation for the loss be had sustained by not having the use of his money during the period he was kept out of possession.

Held, reversing the High Court and restoring the first court, that the original decree did not award interest year by year upon the profits, that the High Court by awarding them added to the decree which was in the course of execution, and that they had no jurisdiction to do so (5).

The amount which might have been received from the land, deducting the collection charges, was the profits of the land. The loss of interest year by year upon those profits was merely damages sustained by the plaintiff in ronsequence of her having been prevented from receiving the profits as they became due. But the original decree did not award those damages (5). (Sir Barnet Peaceck.) HURRO DOORGA CHOWDHRANI P. MAHARANI SURAT SOONDARI DEBIA. (1881) 9 I. A. 1=8 C. 332 (335) =

Lessee of suit property pendente lite—Recovery of profits from—Mode of.

-Execution proceeding or separate swit.

In pursuance of a decree for possession of immovable property and for an inquiry into the mesne profits, past and future, to which the plaintiffs were entitled, an Ameen was appointed to make the necessary inquiry, and he made his report. Thereafter, the plaintiffs put in a petition praying for the addition as a defendant to the suit of a tenant to whom during the pendency of the suit the original defendant had let the suit property, so as to compel the tenant to account for profits which he had received from the same.

Held, reversing the High Court, that there was no power under O. 22, R. 10 or S. 47 of C. P. C. of 1908 to add the tenant as a party-defendant to the suit.

O. 22, R. 10, C. P. C. is inapplicable to the case. The order contemplates cases of devolution of interest from some original party to the suit, whether plaintiff or defendant, upon some one else. The more ordinary cases are death, marriage, insolvency, and then came the general provisions of R. 10 for all other cases. But they are all cases of devolution. Further, the liability, if any, of the tenant to pay damages for removal of the profits is not a liability which has devolved to him from the original defendant. They were both liable, if liable at all, as trespassers, and a case, if any, against the tenant must rest upon his action and the direct relation established thereby between him and the plaintiffs (225-6).

S. 47 of C. P. C. of 1908 does not apply. If the tenants did commit trespasses, these were distinct ones, and not committed by them as representatives of the original defendant. To hold otherwise, would be to confuse the rights

A sale of certain taluks held on 26.4-1885 in execution of a decree in a summary suit brought by the Zemindar against the heirs of S, the tenure-holder, was set aside in a suit brought by the appellant, a mortgagee from S, who had fore-closed and who had become absolute owner of the said talooks before the Zemindar instituted the said summary suit against the heirs of S. It was also held in the appellant's suit that he was entitled to possession, and to be registered as the holder of the talooks from 18-12-1854. The question arose as to the liability to the appellant for mesne profits of the said talooks.

Liability for-(Contd.)

Held that the purchaser at the sale in execution of the decree for arrears of rent was liable for the said mesne profits from the date of his purchase, erg., 26-4-1855; and that in taking the account of such profits, all rent and arrears of rent due and payable to the Zemindar and his heirs should be deducted and allowed (344-5).

It appeared that the Zemindar proceeded to obtain the sale of the tenure, notwithstanding he had notice of the appellant's title, and of the decree of 18-12-1854 giving him possession, and that such sale had been the means of keeping the appellant out of possession, and the cause of the suit and that the Zemindar had persistently disputed the title of the appellant,

Held, therefore, that the decree for mesne profits should be against the heirs of the Zemindar as well as against the purchaser, but that execution should not be had against such heirs in respect of them until after failure to obtain satisfaction from the purchaser (345). that then the question of profits should be taken up. Accordingly he delivered judgment on the question of title, decreeing most of the items in favour of the plaintiff. The judgment added :- " The last two issues " (those relating to mesne profits and costs) " cannot now be decided, and must be left to my successor to decide." The formal decree was, however, confined to the question of title and possession,

On a contention raised by the defendant that that mode of preceeding was wholly beyond the power of the Court, and therefore could not be the ground of any further proceeding in the suit, held, that there was nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which forbade the parties and the Court so to arrange the disposal of a law suit.

The Judge had before him a case consisting of two parts: a question of title, and an incidental question of account depending largely on the title. It was for the obvious advantage of the parties that the first part should be decided and the second reserved for decision (32). (Lord Hobkense.) MAULVI MUHAMMAD ABDUL MAJID 2. MUHAMMAD ABDUL AZIZ. A person claiming an order of pre-emption cannot be regarded in the same light as an ordinary purchaser of an estate. His right is, when an estate has been sold, to acquire the property from the purchaser at the price paid. If the necessary formalities are observed, and the purchaser assents to the claim, possession is given by mutual consent and no difficulty arises; but if the claim be disputed and suit must be brought, the rights of the parties are regulated by S. 214 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which in this respect embodies the principle of the Mahomedan Law. Where, therefore, a suit is brought, it is on payment of the purchase-money on the specified date that the plaintiff ob tains possession of the property, and until that time th-original purchaser retains possession and is entitled to the rents and prefits. It is only when the terms of the decree decided that the question of title should be taken first, and | are fulfilled and enforced that the persons having the right

The plaint in the present suit was filed on 8-7-1833, By that plaint, the respondent demands Rs, 49,999 as mesne profits, from 19-1-1819 to 11-4-1826, interest included. It is certainly somewhat singular that such a demand as this. if well founded, should have been so long delayed; no less than 7 years having elapsed from the period when the claim ended, before the commencement of a suit to recover what is alleged to have been due yearly, at least, if not half-yearly, for seven successive years from 1819. This is surely a circumstance which requires a very satisfactory explanation; for necessarily, after the lapse of so many years, there must be great difficulty in ascertaining the truth of such a demand, not to mention the presumption against it, from non-claim for so long a time (435). It affords no weak presumption against a claim so long delayed, that the respondent, with full knowledge of all the facts, and the nature of the defence, should so long neglect his own interest, with ample means of protecting it (437). It is further argued that a right to the minerals does not infer a right to work. It is a general principle of all grants quando aliquid conceditur sine quo res ipia non esse potest. This is always true as between grantor and grantee, but it does not necessarily apply as against third parties. If the grantor has granted the surface to A and the minerals will not it may well be that the mere grant of the minerals will not include a right to bring down or otherwise injure the surface in the process of winning the minerals. Where, however, the grantee of the minerals is also the grantee of the surface, that grant of the minerals, in a question with the grantor, includes the right to work (115.) (Lord Dunedin.) Transfer of Property Act—S. 108 (0)—Effect of.
S. 108 (0) of the Transfer of Property Act obviously deals with the ordinary lights of a lessee in an ordinary lease, but it would be nothing less than an absurdity to hold that its terms cut down the right to work a mineral field expressly conveyed. ZEMINDAR—MOKURRURY LEASE BY—LESSEE UNDER-RIGHT TO MINERALS OF.

— Grant express or implied of right to minerals— Necessity.

The fact that the right granted by a mobarrari pettah to the lessee is of a permanent, heritable, and transsferable character does not advance the question of whether the lease itself embraced within its scope the mineral rights. On the contrary, unless there be by the terms of the lease an express or plainly implied grant of those rights they remain reserved to the zemindar and part of the zemindari. The suggestion that the lessee in a mobarrari pottah has right to the minerals by reason of the nature of such a grant stands negatived upon authority. (Locd Shaw.) GIRIDHARI SINGH r. MAGHLAL PANDEY. The proprietor of a Zemindari executed a permanent, heritable, and transferable, mokurrari politable at a fixed rent of a small portion of a village within its amout "with all rights (mai huk hukuk)—appertaining to my Zemindari." The pottah also provided for the lessee taking the prices of the trees of the village granted by cutting and selling them.

Held that the lesser under the lease was not untitled to the mineral rights in the village granted.

The words " mai huk kukuk ", assuming that they mean " with all rights ". only give expressly what might otherwise quite will be implied, namely, that that corpus being once ascertained, there will be carried with it all rights appurtenant thereto, including not only possession of the subject itself, but it may be of rights of passage, water or the like, which enure to the subject of the Pottah and may even he derivable from outside properties. It must be borne in mind also that the essential characteristic of a lease is that the subject is one which is occupied and enjoyed and the corpus of which does not in the nature of things and by reason of the user disappear. In order to cause the latter specially to arise, minerals must be expressly denominated, so as thus to permit the idea of partial consumption of the subject leased. The words in question do not, therefore, increase the actual corpus of the subject affected by the Pottah.

Had the mokurrari pottah been a document which by its nature gave as in property the entirety of the land both on and below the surface, the provision in the lease by which power is given to the lessee to cut trees, and, if he cared, to sell them, and the Zemindar renounced any right in them and their proceeds, would be entire surplusage. The Sab-Judge thought that such words as "adba", "urdha", "Hadud Mahdud" were mere words of style commonly used by writers of deeds without a proper understanding of their meaning, and, therefore, refused to give any effect to them. This seems a mistaken view. The High Court, on the other hand, thought that, looking to the anxious expression of the generality of the grant as evidenced by the long category of things conveyed, the words "adha" and "urdha" made it plain that there was every intention to convey all below the surface as well as all on it or above it. ZEMINDARI-MAL VILLAGES IN-LEASE OF.

The question was as to the right to the minerals bying under a certain village, situate within the ancestral zemindari of the first appellant.

About 60 years before the date of suit, in the time of the first appellant's predecessor, a transaction took place whereby the latter appropriated to a certain. Hindu idol, of whom certain persons known as the Goswamis or Gossains, were the Shebaits, an interest of some sort in the village, at an annual rental of Rs. 22 oed. There was no document or evidence defining the terms of the arrangement with the idol. The defendants, against whom the plaintiffs first took proceedings to restrain interference with their minerals, claimed to be lessees of the village from the Goswamis. The village in question was a mal village of the appellants' estate, i. c., it was a part of the first appellant's zemindari. There was no evidence whatever that the Zemindar rajah had ever granted mineral rights in the suit village to the Goswamis, or any other person. No prescriptive rights had been proved by the defendants to any underground rights in the village.

The Subordinate Judge, who decreed the suit, inferred from the smallness of the jumma fixed that only the surface rights and nothing more were intended to be let out to the Goswamis. His judgment was reversed by the High Court which built up the theory that the Goswamis were tenure-holders having permanent heritable and transferable rights from the fact that, in one of two decrees in favour of the rajah for the payment of an annual rent of Rs. 22 add by the Goswamis, the latter were described as "cultivators", and in the other they were described as "britti-holders".

Held, reversing the High Court, that the title of the zemindar rajah to the suit village as part of his Zemindari before the arrival of the Goswamis on the scene having been established, he must be presumed to be the owner of the underground rights thereto appertaining in the absence of evidence that he had ever parted with them, and that no such evidence had been produced. -Blue clay states in land granted -Grantee's right

In 1866 the Rajah of Chumba, an independent Rajah, ceded a portion of his territory to the British Government. Prior to that cession of territory the Raja had secured to one M by an instrument in English the sole right to quarry slate within a portion of the territory subsequently ceded for a term of ten years. On the British Government making use of blue clay slates found in the portion included in the grant to M, the latter claimed to have the exclusive right to such blue clay slates and claimed compensation from the British Government as regards the slates appropriated and used by them.

Held, that, under his grant, M had only the right to quarry roofing and slab state and had no right to the blue clay slate.

Held further, that M's claim to compensation was barred by laches. GUFFIN v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL. (1873) 1 P. B. 1874 (P. C.).

-S. 3-Guardian under- Appointment of-Order for certificate obtained-Formal certificate in pursuance of. not obtained-Effect.

Held that, according to the true construction of S. 3 of Act XL of 1858, a person who had obtained an order for a certificate thereunder was a properly constituted guardian. though he did not obtain a formal certificate in pursuance of such order (200).

The words of S. 3 of the Act are "until he shall have obtained such certificate". The section provides that the person who claims a right to have charge of the property may apply to the civil court for a certificate. The court is to exercise a discretion, or at least is to inquire whether the person making the application is entitled to have the certificate. Their Lordships are of opinion that when the court makes that inquiry, and comes to a decision that the application should be allowed, that is doing all that is substantially necessary in the matter; and when the order is made that the applicant shall have his certificate, the applicant really then obtains his certificate. All is done at that time which is necessary to show that he is the person who should have the certificate. He then, by getting that order, substantially obtains the certificate, although the officer of the court, whose duty it would be to draw up the certificate. and prepare it for the signature of the Judge, or the seal of the court to be attached to it, may not do that for some time afterwards, on account of the course of business, or the party not applying to him for it. When a man obtains an order for a certificate he does in substance comply with the terms of this Act, in the same way as when a person has the judgment of the court that he shall have a decree in his suit it may be said that he then obtains his decree. The decree, when it is drawn up afterwards, relates back to that time; and so would the certificate in this case relate back; and the terms of the Act that he shall have obtained such certificate are complied with (200). Redemption of Accounts on-Possession taken by mortgagee in lieu of interest under prevision in deed to that effect-Accounting for period of-Mortgage's liabslity for.

A mortgage deed, which was executed in 1908, stated that the mortgage was to be for five years. Clause 2 of the deed provided that after five years the mortgagor was to pay at a time and in a lump sum the entire principal, interest and compound-interest and redeem the mortgaged property, clause 3 provided that if interest for four six months was not paid in full, or if at the stipulated period, i.e., after five years, the mortgagor did not redeem on payment of the entire amount due, then in both cases the mortgagee would have the option to take possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of the principal for a period of 12 years commencing from the date of entering into possession. Clause 5 was in these terms: "The mortgagee will remain in possession for 12 years from the date on which he takes possession of the mortgaged property and the mortgagor will not have the right of redemption during the period of 12 years." Clause 6 stipulated for the appropriation of produce and profits in lieu of interest, and that during the period of possession neither the mortgagee was to have any claim to interest nor the mortgagor to profits, and that there was to be no accounting as to shortage or susplusage of profits at the time of redemption.

Interest fell into arrear, and at the stipulated time the mortgage-money was not paid, whereupon the mortgagee took possession in 1915. In a suit brought for redemption in the same year, held that, in taking the accounts, the period during which the mortgagee might have been in possession should be excluded, and that during that period, neither the mortgagee would be accountable for profits nor the mortgagor for interest (66).

Though the provisions of the mortgage entitling the mortgagee to possession cannot operate to defeat S. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, effect should be given to them so far as they provide that the mortgagee is to appropriate in lieu of interest all the produce mal and sewai and profits of the mortgaged villages after payment of the Government revenue (66). -Redemption of Right of Provision in deed baring-Validity-Transfer of Property Act, S. 60-Effect.

at a time and in a lump sum the entire principal, interest and compound interest and redeem the mortgaged property. Clause 3 provided that if interest for four six months was not paid in full, or if at the stipulated period, i.e., after five years, the mortgagor did not redeem on payment of the entire amount due, then in both cases the mortgagee would have the option to take possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of the principal for a period of 12 years commencing from the date of entering into possession. Clause 5 was in these terms; "The mortgagee will remain in possession for 12 years from the date on which he takes possession of the mortgaged property and the mortgager will not have the right of redemption during the period of 12 years."

The mortgage-money was not paid at the end of the five years, and the mortgagee thereupon took possession in 1915. In the same year the mortgagor sued for redemption, and the question was whether his right to redeem was suspended by the provision in the mortgage which purported to entitle the mortgagee to remain in possession for 12 years from the date on which he took possession.

Held that the rights and liabilities of the parties depended upon the terms of the instrument as controlled by the Transfer of Property Act, that the principal money became payable at the end of the five years fixed by the deed, that that was the event on which the mortgagor had a right, under S. 60 of that Act, to redeem on payment of the mortgage money, and that, even if the mortgage was an anomalous mortgage, its provisions hindering that right offended against the statutory right of redemption conferred by S. 60 and were invalid and ineffectual for the purpose (65). These instruments of conditional sale have now an operation quite different from that which they originally had. They are mortgages now, redeemable. like ordinary mortgages, at any time by the mortgagor, or those claiming under him in privity with his title as mortgagor, and subject to foreclosure. In its old character, an instrument of conditional sale was one of sale, conditional at first, and absolute at a certain period afterwards by lapse of time, unless, on the prior performance of a certain condition, the title to the land was on that condition terminating in favour of the conditional purchaser, the same as that of an ordinary owner (353 4). What was really decided in Pattabhiramier's case? It was that the contract of mortgage by conditional sale is a form of security known under various names throughout India; that according to the ancient law of India it was enforceable according to its letter; and that whether it was embodied in one instrument or in two separate instruments, and whether or not the transaction appeared on the face of the instrument to be in its inception a mortgage; and further, that this law must be taken to prevail in every part of India in which it had not been modified either by actual legislation or by established practice. The subject-matter of the decision. therefore, is the contract of mortgage by conditional sale, The essential characteristic of a mortgage by conditional sale was, that on the breach of the coudition the contract executed itself, and the transaction was closed and became one of absolute sale without any further act of the parties or accountability between them. That it still has this effect in the Presidency of Madras was what was decided in Pattabhiramier's case (247-8). (Sir James W. Colvile.) THUMBUSWAMY MUDELLY r. MAHOMED HOOSAIN ROWTHEN. (1875) 2 I. --- Course of -- Comment of Prity Council on.

MORTGAGE - CONDITIONAL SALE-MORT GAGE BY-(Contd.)

Up to 1858 the decisions of the late Sudder Court of Madras were, with one exception, perfectly consistent with the decision of the Board in Pattabhiramier's case. In 1858 the current of decision suddenly turned. In that year the Judges of the late Sudder Court took upon themselves, in contravention of the law of India, as declared and enforced hy the decisions of their predecessors, to apply to this class of security (mortgage by conditional sale) for the first time the principles which the English Courts of equity had for centuries applied to mortgages in England. They did not, however, adopt those principles in their integrity, since they treated the stipulation in favour of the mortgagee as a mere penalty, and made no provision for his getting the benefit of it by the machinery of a foreclosure suit. They apparently contemplated no remedy against the mortgaged property but that of sale (250-1).

That case was followed by the late Sudder Court in three cases decided in 1809, and in three more, of which one was the very case of Pattabhiramier, decided in 1860. And so the course of decision in the Courts of Madras stood when special leave to appeal was granted in Pattabhiramier's case by the Board in April, 1861 (251-2).

The appeal in Pattabhiramier's case slept for nine years, and in the interval the Sudder Court, and afterwards the High Court which succeeded it, continued the course of decision which the former had begun in 1858 (252).

A similar alteration by judicial decisions of the antecedent law was effected at Bombay, though at a later period. The Bombay Court also came to the conclusion as appeared from a decision of that Court of the year 1871, that the modern cause of decision was to prevail against that of the Judicial Committee in Pattabhiramier's case (253).

It appears to their Lordships that this action of the Courts of the Minor Presidencies is open to grave objection; not only because in so altering the existing law they usurped the furctions of the Legislature, but also because the change, as effected, involved very mischievous consequences. Under the law as laid down by them, persons who fifty years before had acquired, as the law then stood, an indefeasible title in lands, which they had ever since held and enjoyed in optima fide, became liable to be dispossessed, and compelled to account for mesne profits at the suit of the representatives of the mortgagor against whom the 60 years' rule of limitation has not yet run (253-4).

Again, the distinction between sales with a condition for repurchase, and mortgages by conditional sale, is made to depend upon the intention of the parties to the original transaction, proveable, if need be, by oral evidence. This seems to open a wide field of litigation, and to leave much to the discretion of the Judge in each particular case; and the enquiry is embarrassed by the circumstance that the parties whose intention is to be ascertained cannot, in the case of an ancient transaction, have contracted with reference to a state of law which the Courts of Madras have decided no longer exists (254).

In Hengal, where the possible mischiefs that might result from leaving mortgages by conditional sale to take effect according to their tenor early became apparent, the Legilature proceeded on sound principles to apply a remedy. By Reg. I of 1798, it gave the mortgagor the means of avoiding any dispute as to tender, and of keeping alive his right of redemption by a payment into Court (254).

By Reg. 17 of 1806, it made provision for redemption and judicial foreclosure by the procedure still in use. But this Regulation had not a retrospective operation upon titles which had become absolute before it came into force. The contrast between this mode of proceeding and that followed by the Courts in Madras and Bombay is obvious (2545). (Sir James IV. Colvile.) THUMBUSWAMY MUDELLY P. MAHONED HOOSAIN ROWTHAN. The appellant gave security for the payment of certain duties due by the respondent to the Government. To secure the amount for which the appellant thus gave security, and another sum advanced by the appellant on behalf of the respondent the latter executed a pattah and an Arzee which, on the face of them, purported to authorize the collector at once to make a transfer of the property to the appellant. As, however, it was meant only as a security to a certain extent. the respondent executed a kararnamah by which it was stipulated that if he should not pay the instalments fully, or that any part of them should be in arrear, the property should be continued under the appellant, consistently with that writing, and that the appellant should only return to the respondent the amount which might have been paid by him. The patta and Arzee were deposited with a third person, who was not to give them up to the appellant for the purpose of enabling him to obtain a transfer of the property, until default should be made according to the agreement. On the same day, the appellant executed a counter-kararnamah, by which the plan of a conditional sale, entitling the appellant to retain the property on default being made was reduced to a mortgage with a covenant that whenever the appellant should take possession of the property, for the purpose of paying himself the amount for which he became security, he should restore the property to the reepondent as soon as he recouped himself that amount out of the rents and profits. Default having been made by the respondent, the appellant was called upon to, and did pay, a part of the money, which the respondent undertook to pay to the Government. On such payment, the patta and Arzee were submitted to the Collector, and a transfer of the property to the appellant was made in pursuance thereof.

In a suit by the respondent against the appellant for recovery of possession of the property, and for recovery of the rents and profits in excess of the amounts advanced by the appellant, held that the real agreement between the parties was that appellant should restore the property to the respondent after reimbursing himself for what he had advanced out of the rents and profits of the property. The deed also stipulated that if the mortgagors did not so pay on the day specified, and a balance still remained due, the mortgagees were to take and enjoy so much of the mortgaged property as would, at a rate fixed by the deed, cover the balance due to them, as if under the terms of a deed of absolute sale. If the balance found due exceeded the value of the mortgaged property as determined by the rate fixed by the deed, the mortgagees were to take the whole of the mortgaged property at the rate fixed as under an absolute sale, and were to be at liberty to proceed against the mortgagors and their other property for the balance.

LAW OF, UNDER BENGAL REGULATIONS.

-Practice of Bengal Courts-Regulation I of 1798-Regulation XVII of 1806-Effect.

Up to the year 1806, the rights of the holder of a Bye-bil-Wuffa were enforceable according to the strict terms of the contract. It was necessary for the mortgagor, if he intended to save his estate from forfeiture, to tender the amount due, or to pay it into Court, pursuant to the provisions of Regulation I of 1798, within the stipulated period for the repayment of the loan. Regulation XVII of 1806, first introduced a modification of the strict rights given by the contract analogous to, though by no means identical with, that which courts of Equity have long imposed on mortgagees in this country (348). The general effect of these Regulations is, that if anything be due on the mortgage and the mortgagor makes an insufficient deposit, and a fortiori if he makes no deposit at all, the right of redemption is gone at the expiration of the year of grace. The title of the mortgagee, however, is not even

LAW OF, UNDER BENGAL REGULATIONS-(Contd.) then complete. A mortgagee, after having done all that Regulation XVII of 1806 requires to be done in order to foreclose the mortgage and make the conditional sale absolute, must bring a regular suit to recover possession if he is out of possession, or to obtain a declaration of his absolute title if he is in possession. In that suit the mortgagor may contest on any sufficient grounds the validity of the conditional sale, or the regularity of the proceedings taken under the Regulation in order to make it absolute. He may also allege and prove, if he can, that nothing is due, or that the deposit (if any) which he has made is sufficient to cover what is due; but the issue in so far as the right of redemption is concerned, will be whether anything at the end of the year of grace remained due to the mortgagee, and if so, whether the necessary deposit had been then made. If that be found against the mortgagor the right of redemption is gone (350-1). (Sir James Colvile.) FORBES v. AMEEROO-NISA BEGUM. (1865) 10 M. I. A. 340 - 5 W. R. 47 -

The Judicial Commissioner in his judgment clearly assumes that the law of foreclosure, as it obtains in the Regulation Provinces, is so far adopted that it is the course of the Courts in the Central Provinces to allow a time for foreclosure, and that some proceedings must be taken in order to obtain an absolute foreclosure; and it lay upon those who came to impeach his decision to show that his ruling was inaccurate. Inasmuch as it is notorious that in the Non-Regulation Provinces a certain discretion is given to the Courts to apply the principles which prevail in the Regulation Provinces in the administration of justice according to the rules of equity and good conscience, their Lordships must, until the contrary is shown, presume that the law has been correctly declared by the Judicial Cammissioner. Necessity-Non-Regulation Provinces.

It was argued that, inasmuch as the Bengal Regulations have not been introduced generally into the Central Provinces, a conditional sale must be taken to become absolute on the failure of the mortgager to pay the mortgage debt on the day fixed, and that the mortgagee is under no obligation to take any proceedings by way of foreclosure. In support of that proposition the decision of this Board in Pattabhiramier's case was relied upon. But that case by no means laid down broadly that out of the Regulation Provinces of Bengal—those provinces to which the Bengal Regulation law strictly and in all its fulness applies—the rule 'aid down was to be adopted. #### REGL. XVII OF 1806-FORECLOSURE UNDER.

— Declaration of absolute title upon—Grant of in mortgagee's suit for possession—Propriety—Suit by him for possession, but possession found to be with him—Dismissal of suit in such case.

Plaintiff purchased certain property from defendant's late husband under a deed of conditional sale and an ikrar. On the day before the date of the bill of sale, defendant's husband granted a lease of the mortgaged premises for three years ostensibly to the son of the plaintiff, and took the corresponding kabooleat from him. The grant of this lease was a benami transaction, and the lease, though taken in the name of his son, was really a lease to the plaintiff, who under colour of it obtained possession of the mortgaged premises. Having obtained an order in proceedings taken to foreclose the mortgage under Reg. XVII of 1806, the plaintiff instituted a suit in order to complete his title under the foreclosure. Treating, however, the lease to his son as a subsisting lease to that person, and himself as out of possession, the plaintiff asked to have possession decreed to him, together with mesne profits. The defendant insisted, before the Privy Council, that inasmuch as it had been conclusively found that the plaintiff was in possession of the mortgaged premises, and the plaint was, nevertheless, for possession and mesne profits, the form of the suit was of itself a sufficient ground for its dismissal.

Held, overruling the objection, that the real object of the suit was to perfect plaintiff's title as absolute owner of the property, and that there was no season why he should not have that relief, if he was otherwise entitled to it, because, under an erroneous view of the effect of the lease, he had asked for it by his plaint in a somewhat different form, and with something to which he was not entitled (355).

(Sir James Colvile.) FORBES v. AMEEROONISM (Sir James Colvile.) To M. I. A. 340 = 5 W.B. 47 = 1 Suth. 621 = 2 Sar. 158.

Declaration of absolute title upon-Mortgage's suit for-Accounts-Production of-Necessity-Admission by mortgagor of balance due-Effect.

The order of remand can be supported only on the principle that, in all cases, it is imperative upon a mortgage who has been in possession to produce his accounts. For this position their Lordships can find no grounds in the Regulations. The words of S. 3 of Regulation I of 1798, from which (if at all) an inflexible obligation to produce the accounts must be inferred, impose two conditions, the possession of the mortgagee, and the necessity of an account. And a comparison of this with the preceding section, and with Regulation XVII of 1806, shows that that necessity arises, and need only arise, first, when the mortgagor had deposited the principal, leaving the question of interest to be settled on an adjustment of the account; secondly, when he has deposited all that he admits or alleges to be due; thirdly, when he pleads, and undertakes to prove, that the whole of the principal and interest has been liquidated by the usufruct of the property (357-8). Upon principle the obligation to produce the accounts should depend on the circumstances of the case and the nature of the issues raised (359).

In a suit brought by a mortgagee in possession, who had done all that was required under Regulation XVII of 1806 in order to foreclose the mortgage and make the conditional sale absolute, for a declaration of his absolute title to the property, the question was whether the Sudder Court was right in requiring the plaintiff-appellant to produce his accounts, and in remanding the cause for re-trial on the production of those accounts. The issue upon which the determination of the cause depended, and upon which even by the order of remand it was made to depend, was whether the loan had been liquidated with interest, from the usufruct of the property. Not only was there no allegation on the pleadings, or issue raised in the cause, to the effect that the loan had been thus liquidated, but there was an express admission on the face of the defendant's answer that even on his mode of stating the account, the principal sum of Rs. 30,000 had, when the foreclosure proceedings were commenced, and when he ought to have made the requisite deposit, been reduced by no more than Rs. 927. It was, therefore, clear, upon the face of the proceedings, that the question to be tried could be answered only in one way, and that in favour of the appellant.

Held, that, upon the true construction of the Regulations applicable to the case, there was no necessity for calling for the production of the accounts, and that, consequently, the order for the remand was wrong (357). (Sir James W. Colvile.) FORBES v. AMEEROONISSA BEGUM.

The respondent sued to recover possession of the property included in his mortgage deed, having perfected his title under that deed by the usual proceedings in foreclosure, One of the defendants in the suit was the appellant, who was in possession of part of the mortgaged property as purchaser at an execution sale. He defended his possession by pleading that the mortgage was from the first a collusive transaction, an arrangement between the mortgagors and the mortgagee designed to protect the property of the mortgagors from the claims of their creditors.

Held, reversing the High Court and restoring the first Court, that, as against the appellant, the mortgage was not a hong fide one, but one of those transactions into which a friendly party might have been induced to enter in order to protect the young men, the mortgagors, from their creditors, Hindu and Mahomedan Laws.

Recognition of Mortgage by conditional sale by. That this form of security (mortgage by Bye-bil-wuffa or Kut-kabala usufructuary) has long been common in India is notorious. The fact is stated in the preamble to the Bengal Regulation I of 1798. That such contracts were recognised and enforced according to their letter by the ancient Hindu Law appears from several passages in Colebrooke's Digest. That they were equally recognised and enforced between Mahomedans is shown by Mr. Baillie in his introduction to his work on the Mahomedan Law of sale. If the ancient law of the county has been modified by any later rule, having the force of law, that rule must be founded either on positive legislation, or on established practice (568). Law applicable to.

— Pattabhiramier's case—Decision in —Later decisions in Madras and Rombay—Mortgages before and after 1858 — Distinction.

In Pattabhiramier's case, the Judicial Committee decided that the contract of mortgage by conditional sale was a form of security known under various names throughout India; that according to the ancient law of India it was enforceable according to its letter, and that whether it was embodied in one instrument or in two separate instruments, and whether or not the transaction appeared on the face of the instrument to be in its inception a mortgage; and further, that that law must be taken to prevail in every part of India in which it had not been modified either by actual legislation or by established practice.

The earlier decisions of the Sudder Court of Madras were with one exception, perfectly consistent with the decision of the Board in Pattabhiramier's case. The later decisions of the Sudder Court of Madras, and of the High Court which succeeded it, had modified the ancient law. They applied to that class of socurity for the first time the principles which the English Courts of equity had for centuries applied to mortgages in England.

There was a similar change in the law effected by the decisions in Bombay,

The above being the state of the authorities, their Lord ships observed: "It may obviously become a question with this Committee in future cases whether they will follow the decision in Pattabhirantier's case which appears to them based upon sound principles, or the new course of decision that has sprung up at Madras and Bombay, which appears to them to have been, in its origin, radically unsound".

"On a stale claim to redeem a mortgage, and dispossess a mortgagee who had, before 1858, acquired an absolute title, there would be strong reasons for adopting the former course. In the case of a security executed since 1858 there would be strong reasons for recognising and giving effect to the Madras authorities, with reference to which the parties might be supposed to have contracted. Their Lordships abstain from expressing any opinion upon this question until the necessity for determining it shall arise" (255). (Sir James W. Colvile.) THUMBUSWAMY MUDELLLY 2. MORTGAGE - CONDITIONAL SALE - MORT-GAGE BY-(Contd.)

Mortgage for term.

MORTGAGE—MONEY—SUIT FOR, BEFORE EXPIRY OF TERM—MORTGAGEE'S RIGHT OF.

 Mortgagor denying receipt of money and admitting non-delizery of property.

A conditional bill of sale and mortgage deed stated that the mortgagor had mortgaged and conditionally sold the villages described therein for the sum specified, and that he had received the said sum and made over the said villages to the purchaser. The deed fixed a period of twenty years for the redemption of the villages, and provided that, if, after the expiration of the said period, the mortgagor at once paid to the mortgagee the entire mortgage amount, the latter should receive the same and deliver back the deed and possession of the mortgaged villages, while, if he did not so pay, the mortgagee might foreclose the mortgage.

The mortgagor received the entire mortgage money, but refused to put the mortgage in possession of the mortgage villages. In ronsequence, the mortgage instituted the sait out of which the appeal arose within the period of twenty years fixed by the deed for recovery of the principal and interest due under the deed. The mortgagor, by his answer, took a preliminary objection to the suit for recovery of the principal and interest; he did not deny the execution of the mortgage and bill of conditional sale, but submitted that it was contrary to the conditions in the deed to bring a sait before the expiration of twenty years, the time therein limited; he also denied the receipt of the mortgage amount.

The Courts below found that the mortgagor had received the entire mortgage money, and gave a decree to the plaintiff as prayed for.

The question is this, whether, upon the pleadings in this case and the evidence before the Court below, the transaction was complete, or whether it was one that was need completed? Now, both parties agree that possession was never delivered; that is admitted upon the pleadings. It does not appear. however, that they otherwise agree; of the contrary, they dispute both the law and evidence, but they agree upon the principal point on the pleadings The defendant also denies the receipt of the purchase money It is not, however, necessary to search for precedents. The case depends upon the general principle of law. The party says, I never delivered possession, and never received the money. He disaffirms the transaction. (Mr. Penkelm Leigh). REDEMPTION OF-(Contd.)

The Judgment of the Court below assumes that an obligation lay on the mortgagee to do some act by way of enforcing what is not very correctly termed the penalty; and that there could be no adverse possession against the mortgagor until there had been a tender and refusal of the mortgage money. But this assumption implies that in some way or other the rights and obligations of the parties as defined by the contract had been qualified by a known rule of law. But no such qualifications have been introduced, as in Bengal (by Regulation XVII of 1806), by any act of legislation into the Statute law applicable to Madras. The English doctrine of "the equity of redemption" was unknown to the ancient law of India; and if it could have been introduced by the decisions of the Courts of the East India Company, their Lordships can find no such course of decisions. In fact, the weight of authority seems to be the other way. It must not, then, be supposed that in allowing this appeal, their Lordships design to disturb any rule of property established by judicial decisions so as to form part of the Law of the Foram, wherever such may prevail, or to affect any title founded thereon (571.2). -Expiry of term-Relemption before and after-Regulation XVII of 1806-Inapplicability to Madras of.

In Bengal, in cases to which Regulation XVII of 1806 does not apply, the interest of a mortgagec under a deed of conditional sale becomes absolute according to the terms of the contract, by the mere failure of the mortgagor to redeem within the stipulated period (569-70). That Regulation allowed a mortgagor, who had executed such a security, to redeem at any time before the mortgagee had finally foreclosed the mortgage by taking the proceedings which the Regulation made essential to foreclosure (569). That Regulation had of itself no force in the Presidency of Madras. And their Lordships cannot find either in the Madras Regulations or in the Acts of the Indian Legislature subsequent to the Charter Act of 1834, any Act, by which similar provisions have been enacted for Madras (562). MORTGAGE -- CONDITIONAL SALE -- MORT MORTGAGE -- CONDITIONAL SALE -- MORT GAGE BY-(Contd.)

-- Mort gage-money-Suit for-Dicree in-Possession in execution of-Right to.

By a bond, dated 10th February, 1857, G mortgaged a certain village to the appellants and their father as security for a loan. The bond provided that, "If I fail to pay the money as stipulated, I and my heirs shall without objection cause the settlement of the said village to be made with you". The mortgagees brought a suit for the recovery of the mortgage debt, and obtained a decree for the satisfaction of the amount decreed either by the defendant himself or out of the mortgaged property. The decree, however, was not executed in that way. After two years' delay, the mortgages applied for execution of their decree, but in a different way. After stating that the money had not been paid according to the decree, they said the enforcement of the condition of the bond was then just, and therefore they prayed that the full possession of the village might be given to them in perpetuity, and the defendant be released from liability under the decree.

Hdd, that the proceedings above-mentioned differed entirely from those which would have been had by parties entitled under a deed of conditional sale to an absolute interest.

If the law did not impose upon the mortgagees the necessity of taking proceedings for foreclosure, they would have brought their suit for the possession of the estate. If the law required them to take proceedings for foreclosure, they would have taken such proceedings, and after foreclosure would have sued for possession; or possibly, having regard to the nature of the property and the terms of the instrumeat, they might have sued to compel a specific performance of the undertaking of the mortgagor to cause a settlement of the village to be made with them. But they certainly would not have sued for the mortgage debt, or taken a decree in the form above-mentioned, 2v2., for the satisfaction of the amount decreed either by the defendant himself or out of the mortgaged property. -Possession taken by, without proper forcelosure proceedings-Ejectment suit against him by mortgagor in case of-Right of.

Under the Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806, the mortgagee or his representative had the right to take legal proceedings with a view to foreclosure; and that foreclosure he could have obtained, if, after the proper steps had been taken, the representatives of the mortgagor had failed to redeem within the time limited for that purpose by the terms of the Regulation. But there was no right to take possession of the property without the proceedings prescribed by law. If he does so take possession, he is a mere trespasser, and the mortgagor or his heirs will be entitled to sue him in ejectment as such. (Sir Arthur Wilson.) SHEIKH HUB ALI T. WAZIR-UN NISSA. #### Nature and incidents of.

-History of law with regard to.

Mr. MacPherson, in his work upon mortgages thus accurately defines this form of security (mortgage by conditional sale). He says: "The mortgage by conditional sale, 'Kut kubula,' or 'Bye-bil-wufa,' is that in which the borrower not making himself personally liable for the repayment of the loan, covenants that, on default of payment of principal and interest on a certain date, the land pledged shall pass to the mortgagee." Such a mortgage might or might not be usufructuary. If usufructuary, it usually contained a stipulation that the usufruct should be in lieu of interest. The 36 A. 195 (199-200).

Nature and inclidents of-(Contd.)

effect of such a stipulation was modified by legislation in consequence of the laws against usury, but has, by Act XXVIII of 1855, I cen restored in its integrity as to all contracts made subsequent to the passing of that Act. The essential characteristic of a mortgage by conditional sale was, that on the breach of the condition the contract executed itself, and the transaction was closed and became one of absolute sale without any further act of the parties or accountability between them (248). #### Ordinary mortgage or.

-Evidence.

In this case the question was whether the mostgage in question was an ordinary mortgage or one in the nature of by-bil-seuffa or deed of conditional sale containing a stipulation that, in default of payment within one year, the interest of the mortgagee should become absolute.

The Courts below concurrently found on the evidence that the mostgage was only an ordinary mortgage, and their Lordships accepted the finding. AGHA HUSSUN KHAN BAHADOOR v. MUSSUMAT JANEE BEGUM.

(1872) 8 M. J. 149.

Origin of.

Personal liability in-Provision for-Necessity.

Mortgages by conditional sale under various names are a common form of mortgage in India. This form of mortgage is said to have been introduced to enable Mahomedans contrary to the precepts of their religion to lend money at interest and obtain security for principal and interest. If so, one would expect to find that the transaction would, as far as possible, be made to assume the appearance of a sale. It is not necessary in a mortgage by conditional sale "kutkubala" or "bye-bil-wuffa" that the mortgagor should make himself personally liable for the repayment of the loan (66). Lord Datey.) #### Payment on date fixed-Failure.

-Rights of parties on.

An ordinary deed of conditional sale imports in terms a sale of the interest of the party which is to become absolute and conclusive upon his failure to pay the stipulated sum at a certain date. Such a contract would, independently of any rule of law to the contrary, execute itself, and the remedy of the party upon it would, if he were out of possession, be a suit for possession. #### Redemption of.

-Interest-Rents and profits received by mortgagee in excess of legal-Account of-Mort gagee's liability as to.

Ss. 8 and 9 of Madras Regulation XXXIV of 1802 extended to Madras, the provisions of Ss. 10 and 11 of Bengal Regulation XV of 1793. Both these Regulations were passed with the object of fixing the legal rate of interest, and of preventing the taking of interest in excess of it; and both have since been wholly or in great part repealed with other usury laws by Act XXVIII of 1855. The clauses in question affected only that part of the contract now under consideration (mortgage by Bye bil-wuffa or Kutkabala usufructuary) which related to the usufruct of the property. As to that they may have made it necessary. contrary to the intention of the parties, to take upon a redemption an account of the rents and profits as between Mortgagor and Mortgagee in possession, compelling the latter to set what he might have received in excess of legal interest against the principal; but they neither extended the time of redemption nor imposed upon the Mortgagee, when the Mortgagor had failed to redeem within the stipulated period, the obligation of taking any judicial or other proceedings in order to make his title absolute (568-9). -Right of-Indications in deed itself of intention that it should be a mortgage-Necessity.

The appellants argue that the language, whether of the Transfer of Property Act, S. 58 (/), or of the Regulations (Bengal Regulation I of 1798 and Regulation XVII of 1806), shews that in order to attract their provisions there must be underlying ostensible arrangements for sale a real. substantial intention to secure money advanced. The repondents, on the other hand, contend that a conditional sale becomes subject to an equity of redemption by force of the Regulations before mentioned, independently of any indications in the document that it is intended to be a mortgage This is a question on which their Lordships are not called on to express an opinion in this case, for the documents in question contain important indications of the intention of the parties (67). Lease for term of mortgaged property by mortgagor benami to mortgagee's son—Possession taken by mortgagee under—Effect of.

Plaintiff purchased certain property from defendant's late husband under a deed of conditional sale and an ikrar. On the day before the date of the Bill of sale, defendant's husband granted a lease, of the mortgaged premises for three years ostensibly to the son of the plaintiff, and rook the corresponding kabooliat from him. The grant of the lease was a benami transaction, and the lease, though taken in the name of his son, was really a lease to the plaintiff, who under colour of it obtained possession of the mortgaged premises. Having obtained an order in proceedings taken to foreclose the mortgage under Regulation XVII of 1806, the plaintiff instituted a suit to perfect his title as absolute owner of the property. In that suit the defendant contended that the Bye-bill-wuffa, the ikrar, the lease, and the kahooliyat must be taken together as one transaction; that the effect of the two latter so qualified that of the two former, that the mortgage must be taken to have been in its inception, one for the term of 3 years, and that until the expiration of the term the plaintiff was not at liberty to take any step towards forceclosure.

Held that the defendant could not list repudiate the obligations of the lease and claim the benefit of it (355-6).

That transaction has been held, and properly held, not to effect that for which it was probably designed, viz., to save the plaintiff, from the liabilities, whilst it gave him the advantages of a mortgagee in possession. Still less can it be taken to do what it was never meant to do, viz., modify the terms of the conditional sale (356). (Sir fames Colvile.) FORBES P. AMEEROONISSA BEGUM.

For the amount thus due by the respondent to firm O, he exeruted a mortgage and a pro-note to V, and a letter of even date which recited the execution of the mortgage and of the pro note and directed V to pay the amount secured by the mostgage and by the pro-note to firm O. The mortgage deed stated to be for consideration received, and, on the face of it, did not disclose the real nature of the transaction. But that deed, taken with the pro-note and the letter of the same date, showed that no consideration passed for the mortgage, and that the re-pondent executed it in favour of V. because the latter represented that he was being pressed by firm O for the payment of the debt which the respondent had by the dissolution agreement undertaken to pay but neglected to do so. Specific Performance of-(Contd.)

by mortgagee for—Maintainability—Relief to be granted in—Indebtedness not ascertained before suit and capable of being ascertained only on taking accounts.

In a suit for the specific performance of an agreement by the defendant to give a mortgage to the plaintiff for the amount in which the defendant might on taking accounts be found to be indebted to the plaintiff, held that the property being identified and the terms of the loan being fixed, equity would enforce the agreement, unless there were circumstances which the Court would consider sufficient to justify the unqualified refusal on the defendant's part to carry out its terms.

Held further that, the agreement being one to give a mortgage for the true amount of the indebtedness, whatever it might be, the fact that the action was begun before the account was settled did not deprive the plaintiff of all right to relief

Midd also that the true relief to which the plaintiff was entitled was (a) an account of the amount due, and (b) the execution of a proper mortgage to secure that sum. (Lord Buckmaster.) Lease—Agreement to give mortgage and to take— Specific performance of—Two parts easily separable.

In a suit brought by the appellant for specific performance of an agreement whereby the respondent agreed to accept a loan of Rs. 40,000 from him, and to grant him a lease of the respondent's zemindary for 19 years, it was contended that specific performance was not the proper remedy, because the contract was a contract for mortgage.

Held, over-ruling the objection, that the contract being one not only for movingage but also for a lease, and the two parts being easily separable, the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance (232).

So far as the plaintiff is concerned, he is bound, if he asks for the lease, to grant the loan. And he is willing to do that, but he is also willing to take the lease without insisting on the loan. It is true that it would be an idle thing to compel the defendant to receive a loan which, there being no contract to the contrary, he might re pay at once; or on reasonable notice. But if he wishes to be released from that part of the contract, it will not be carried into effect by the Court (232). (Lord Hobboute.) GREGSON 2. RAJAH SRI SRI ADITYA DEB. (1889) 16 I. ### MORTGAGE-DECREE-INTEREST NOT AWAR | MORTGAGE-DEED OF-(Contd.) DED BY-MORTGAGE FOR.

-Validity of-Interest allowed by executing Court and not allowed by it-Distinction between cases of.

A decree for money was silent as to the payment of future interest. In execution of the decree, the decree-holder applied for an attachment of the village of the defendants (the sons of the judgment-debtor) for an amount which, however, included future interest on the amount decreed, and an order for sale was issued. To avert the sale, the defendants and their father executed an instalment mortgage bond by way of conditional sale which was to become absolute on default in payment of instalments. The bond included future interest on the amount decreed. The mortgage was sanctioned by the Court, and the execution struck off the file as completely disposed of.

In a suit to enforce the mortgage bond, it was found that there was no fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment of facts on the part of the plaintiff as regards his right to the future interest not allowed by the decree. Both the parties and the executing Court, however, laboured under a mistake of law as to the plaintiff's right to recover such interest in execution. And the mortgage appeared to have been executed by way of compromise after an examination of the accounts at which the father was present; and the plaintiff did not gain any unconscionable advantage by the transaction.

Held, that the suit bond was valid and enforceable for the amount for which the village had been ordered to be sold in execution (85): but that it was not valid and not enforceable for the amount in excess of that for which the village bad been ordered to be sold, because, though there was no wilful misrepresentation in that respect by the plaintiff, there was no authority under S. 249 of C. P. C. of 1859 for increasing that amount (85). (Sir Barnes Pra-cock). SETH GOKULDASS GOPALDASS : MUSLI AND ZALIM. (1878) 5 I.A. 78 = 3 C. 602 (609 10) = 2 C. L. R. 156 = 3 Suth. 515 = 3 Sar. 802.

By an agreement dated 14th February, 1920, made between the Pioneer Mills. Ltd. (hereinafter called the Company) and the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs were appointed Ranians to the Mills and agreed to finance them to the extent of Rs. 15,00,000 receiving interest on the daily balances at 8 per cent, per annum and commission of 2 annas in the maund on certain purchases and manufactured goods,

The agreement further provided :-

That all stock-in-trade . . . Shall be under hypothecation to the Banians and in their charge and control . . . and all deliveries shall be made upon delivery orders from the Company and up in payment to the Banians of the price of the quantity to be delivered upon the delivery orders."

Clause 7 provided—" That the Company shall as soon as possible after the execution of these presents execute in favour of the Hanians a regular deed of mortgage of the land refinery factory plants machineries implements structeres and buildings at Unoo for the sum of Rs. five lacs to meet any deficit that may be due to the Banians for the advances made by them after availing of the stock under hypothecation to them as aforesaid."

Hdd, that the terms of the said agreement of 14th February, 1920, which related to the immovable property of the Company, did not constitute a mortgage or charge upon such property within the meaning of Ss. 58 and 100 of the T. P.Act, in respect of the sums advanced thereunder.

So far as the immocable property was concerned, the said agreement merely created a right in the plaintiffs to obtain another document, 2v2., a regular deed of mortgage of the said immovable property which was to be executed by the Company. I will immediately first of all pay the debt due to the said banker, and will pay the other creditors afterwards. In both cases, that is, while the estate is under management and after it is released, the repayment of this debt will be the subject of my first consideration. In the event of any breach of contract taking place on my part. the said banker is at liberty to institute a suit within the time fixed in this bond and recover the money. I will not transfer or mortgage to any one the hypothecated property till the principal and interest of this debt is paid up; if I do so it will be illegal . . . These few lines have therefore been written as an unconditional bond hypothecating my property, so that it may serve as a document and be of use when required".

A mortgage deed of 10-3-1874, after stating that there was to be a mortgage for Rs. 50.000, with a promise to pay it up in 5 years, from 1875 to 1879, proceeded ;- " Therefore I do hereby mortgage without possession to the Shahzada, in lieu of Rs. 50,000 the following villages, together with all vested and contingent rights, . . . and I covenant as follows :- 1. I will pay Rs. 10,000 per annum at both crops to the Shahzada Saheb, and out of that amount his servants will first deduct the interest, whatever it may come to by calculation, and then credit the balance towards the principal; and in case of any disorder which may cause default in payment of the instalment the servants of the Shah-Zada Saheb Bahadur taking complete possession, of the mortgaged estate, will hold themselves liable for the payment of the Government revenue, including land revenue and cesses of all sorts, and having first deducted from the savings the cost of making collections at the rate of 10 per cent. on the gross rental on account of the pay of servants, will credit the balance towards the instalment money; at the end of each year, in the months of May, June, November and December, having made up accounts, they will note the date of realization. Till the time the accounts are made up there will be no claim or objection on my part to set off the interest against the amount collected; on the other hand the amount collected will be considered benami transaction and thereupon a question arose upon as amount in deposit." At the end of it the instrument provided: " Should, on the expiry of the term of this instrument, any money remain due, then, till the payment thereof, possession will continue according to the terms herein set out. If I do not accept this, then as soon as the breach of promise occurs they will at the end of the year realise the whole amount of instalment by sale of the villages and of other moveable and immovable property belonging to me. Should in any way any objection be raised by me, or by my husband, as between us or in Court, and it will be void."

Held that the reasonable construction of the deed was that there was an absolute power to the mortgagee to take possession on default in payment of the instalment, but if the mortgagor objected to the mortgagee applying the rents in reduction of the principal and interest, the mortgagee might sell the mortgaged property and the other property which was brought the security, in order to satisfy the debt (6).

A construction which will give effect to all the parts of the instrument is that the words, "If I do not accept this" may be referred to the part which immediately proceeds that passage, namely, that which provides for the setting off the interest against the amount collected by the mortgagee when in possession. The other construction would not only not give the proper effect to the first part of the instrument, but it would also involve what could scarcely have been contemplated by the parties, wz., that the only security, the only remedy which the mortgagee would have if the mortgagor thought fit to insist upon it, would be that upon default in payment of an instalment he would be obliged to sell a portion of the property so as to realize the amount of that instalment. That can scarcely have been in the contemplation of the parties (6). (Sir Richard Couch). DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF RAE BARELIT, RAMPAL (1884) 12 I A. 1-11 C. 237-4 Sar 585= SINGH. R. and J's. No. 87.

Nature of mortgage created by. ANOMALOUS MORTGAGE.

Simple and usufruetuary mortgage-Combination of. Exhibit A in the care purported to be a deed of "mortgage with possession" of immoveable properties described in Schedules A. B. C and D for a sum of 11 lakhs of rupees, with interest at 10 onnas per cent. per month, to be recovered from the rents and profits. The mortgagor was to have liberty to pay off the mortgage money at the end of four years, with option to defer payment for a further period of two years. If the money was not paid on a date fixed, the entire amount then due was to carry interest at 1 per cent. per mensem—10 annas from the rents and pro-fits and the remaining 6 annas to be payable by the mortgagor personally being also charged on the properties.

Held that the mortgage created by the deed was an anomalous mortgage or at least a combination of a simple mortgage and an usufructuary mortgage (77).

The mortgage no doubt is usufructuary, but it is something more, inasmuch as it contains covenants on the part of the mortgagor to pay both principal and interest (77). (Lord Sinka). PANAGANTE RAMARAVANIMGAR F. MAHA-RAJA OF VENKATAGIRI.

On 8-4-1923, a mortgage was executed to secure an advance of Rs. 30,000 currying interest at the rate of 5 annas and 1 pie per cent. per month.

By clause 2 of the mortgage it was stated that an 8 annas share in certain villages had been hypothecated in lieu of the principal mortgage money and interest and in order to pay the annual interest on the mortgage money possession over the hypothecated property had been delivered to the mortgagee, who after paying the revenue, should appropriate the surplus profits to the extent of the annual interest. By clause 3 of the mortgage money was promised to be repaid within 35 years and at the stipulated time when in Khali fast in the month of Jeth or at any other time the mortgagors should pay money to the mortgagee the mort-gaged property should become redeemed.

The fourth clause of the mortgage contained a further provision that the mortgagors should remain entitled to eject tenants, to enhance rent, to cultivate land and to issue leases and after enhancement and payment of interest if alleged to have held from his father, or whether it was a there be left any surplus or if the mortgagors pay any year or each year any amount of money then that money should be deemed to have been paid towards the principal and interest on the money paid should be deducted and that the mortgagee like the mortgagors, should possess all the remaining powers during the period of his possession.

By clause 5 it was provided that if the mortgagors fail to pay the mortgage-money and fail to redeem the mortgage at the appointed time then the mortgagee should have power to realise the money due to him by sale of the mortgaged property and that if the mortgaged property should be found to be insufficient to satisfy the full demand then the mortgagee should be entitled to recover the balance from the other properties of the mortgagors, and by clause (7) it was provided that if on the claim of any person any part or whole of the mortgaged property were to go out of the mortgager's pessession or if there were to arise any disturbance in the mortgagee's possession then the liability therefor should rest with the mortgagors.

Held, reversing the Court below, that upon its true construction the mortgage was a combination of a simple mortgage and an usufructuary mortgage, and not an anomalous mortgage to which the provisions of S, 98 of the T, P. Acl applied.

The only clause in the mortgage which presents any difficulty is clause 4, but that clause appears at most only to enable the mortgagors to act as manager without in any way detracting from the effect of clause 2, which entitled the mortgagee to possession. Property, one half of which was, as a matter of fact, subject to two mortgages, one for Rs. 3,000 and another for a sum of Rs. 900, in favour of A' was purchased by A in the belief caused by his vendors that it was subject only to the mortgage for Rs. 3,000. In that belief A mortgaged the property to the predecessor in title of the plaintiff. That mortgage took the following form:-The arrangement made was that the mortgagee should receive, in addition to the sum advanced a further sum equal to half the principal, which would take the place of interest, making Rs. 7,500 in all, and that this should be repayable by six yearly instalments of Rs. 1 250, and that the mortgagee should enter into possession of the unincumbered half of the property; that, as to the other half, on the expiry of the term of K's mostgage the mostgagee might pay off the Rs. 3,000, add that sum to his security, and take possession of the other half of the property. In that event there were to be certain provisions as to the expenses of management and as to the allowance of a sum by way of maintenance to the mortgagor, which in the events that happened became immaterial. Finally there was a proviso that the mortgagor might at any time redeem the mortgage on payment of the principal sum due with interest at I per cent per mensem.

On the execution of the mortgage the mortgagee entered into possession of the unincumbered half of the property and continued in uninterrupted possession thereof. He did not pay off K, but, after many years, the representatives of the mortgagor, A obtained a decree for redemption against

A mistake means that parties intending to do one thing have by unintentional error done something else.

When the question was whether the description in a mortgage dued of one of the items of property mortgaged was inserted by mistake, and there was no evidence whatever that the error was unintentional or indeed that there was any error at all. held that a finding that the description was due to mistake was unjustifiable and that a rectification of the deed was not permissible (119). In a suit to enforce a lien on land created by an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds, objection was taken to the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had not sued for a specific performance of the contract to sell the land, which was also part of the contract to pledge. But while the lien was immediately created by the contract, and was expressed to be immediate, the sale was contemplated as future.

The defendants objected to the frame of the suit, on the ground that the plaintiff ought also to have sued for a specific performance of the contract to sell the land to him.

Scope of security in case of .

Where titles of property are handed over with nothing said except that they are to be security, the law supposes that the scope of the security is the scope of the title. however, titles are handed over accompanied by a bargain, that bargain must rule. Lastly, when the bargain is a written bargain, it, and it alone, must determine what is the scope and the extent of the security. In the words of Lord Cairns. " Although it be a well-established rule of equity that a deposit of a document of title, without more, without writing, or without word of mouth will create in equity a charge upon the property referred to, I apprehend that that general rule will not apply where you have a deposit accompanied by an actual written charge. In that case you must refer to the terms of the written document and any implication that might be raised, supposing there were no document, is put out of the case and reduced to silence by the document by which alone you must be governed."

A memorandum put upon the back of a promissory note then granted was to the effect : " As security grant of a house in 14th Street, Rangoon." Held that the memorandum definitely limited and described the scope of the security (125). Held further that, there was nothing in the case which confirmed the view that, under the term ' house," which was a singular term applicable to a singular title, there was included the subject of three other plots of land under leases (126-7). ### Mortgage within meaning of T. P. Act if a.

The contention that an equitable mortgage effected by deposit of title deeds is not a mortgage in the sense of the T. P. Act, and that consequently the priority sections have no application is untenable in view of the wor s of S, 58(a)of the Act. Unless the deposit of title deeds effects the transfer of an interest in a specific immovable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced, it is absolutely nothing at all. Further the concluding words of S, 59 of the Act actually use the word 'mortgage" to denote the security effected by delivery of documents of title. (Lord Dunedin.) IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA 2. Partnership transaction merely (being advance by one partner to another to be paid off out of profits) or.

Test.

The question was whether an equitable charge was created in favour of the appellant from by deposit of certain title deeds to secure a sum of Rs. 25,000 with interest.

The appellant was a money-lender and banker and he also carried on business, under another firm name, as a merchant. His merchant firm entered into partnership with one C, the predecessor in interest of the respondents. It was a business for the making and sale of oil. There was an existing mortgage on one of its mills for Rs. 25,000; the mortgagee was pressing for the money and C, the other active partner in the oil firm besides the appellant, went to the appellant and asked him to raise the Rs. 25,000, necessary to discharge the mortgage. Under one of the Articles of partnership between the appellant and C and the other persons in the firm, it was provided that the mortgages to which the mills were subject should be paid off out of the share of profits of C. The appellant sent his clerk to the office of the original mortgage's lawyer, where the clerk paid off the mortgage and brought back the deeds and handed them over to the appellant. It was not suggested that on that occasion, when C was present, there was any verbal agreement come to about the mortgage. The evidence of the clerk, who said that the agreement had been come to the day before, was disbelieved by the appellate Court which held, under all the circumstances of the case, that no charge was constituted, and that the transaction in question was a mere partnership transaction, an advance from one partner to another to be paid off, like other advances already existing, out of profits.

Where, in a case in which the question was whether an equitable mortgage constituted by the deposit of title-deeds had been sufficiently made out, the Chief Court of Lower Burma held against the mortgage, relying upon, inter alia (1) the improbability of a mortgage for a large sum being constituted by the deposit of one deed, and one deed aloneand (2) the improbability of the transaction not being enter, ed in the account books of the lender, their Lordships observed that the weight of such inferences could be most satisfactorily appreciated by the Judges of the Court below who were, from their position and training, well-acquainted with the habits and ways of the persons concerned, and the value of the thing in discussion. The contract took place with parties living within the local limits of the Supreme Court of Madras, though it related to land beyond them. The evidence showed that the plaintiff looked, not simply to the personal credit of the 1st defendant, but hargained for a security on the land. The parties did not contract with reference to any particular law. No local law, nor any lex loci rei sitor existed, forbidding the creation of a lien by the contract and deposit of deeds which existed in the case; and by the general law of the place where the contract was made, that is the English law, the deposit of titledeeds as a security would create a fien on lands. Keeping alive of, as against execution purchaser pursuant to attachment-Intention as to.

On 5th October, 1891, property, which was subject to two mortgages, was attached in execution of a money decree obtained against the mortgagor by a third party. At the time of attachment the mortgagor was negotiating with M for a loan to enable him to pay off the said two mortgages and for other purposes. In accordance with that arrangement the mortgagor executed a mortgage bond in favour of M on 7th October, 1891, which bond, after reciting the two old mortgages, and the loan of Rs. 40,000 to pay them off, charged the property with that amount and interest at 12 p r cent. The bond contained a clause to the effect: "I promise that after repaying the money due on the aforesaid two mortgages I shall cause a reconveyance of those properties to be executed and registered, and shall make over to you the mortgage deeds which I shall get back." On 8th October, 1891, that arrangement was carried out; the 40,000 rupees were advanced; the two old mortgages were paid off; the property comprised in them was reconveyed to the mortgagor; he got the deeds and handed them to .W. In July, 1892, part of the mortgaged property was sold in pursuance of the said attachment, and was purchased by the appellant.

On a claim by the appellant to be entitled to the property purchased by him free of all incumbrances, held that Mwas entitled to a lien for the amount actually applied

Nothing can be clearer than that the intention of the parties to this transaction was to give Ma charge for Rx. 40,000 on the property in question in priority to all other charges, if any. B, the then Mobunt of an asthal, executed a benami registered deed of sale in 1860 in favour of M in respect of three mouzahs appertaining to the asthal, and caused the name of M to be substituted in the Collector's register for that of the Mohunt of the asthal. In 1869, M, while merely the apparent owner of the mouzahs, and whilst the relationship of principal and agent existed between the Mohunt and himself, executed a mortgage bond in favour of L, mortgaging the said three mouzahs and another mouzah. L's mortgage was admittedly binding upon the asthal. In 1872, M, not being then the agent of the asthal and not having any authority to mortgage asthal property, executed a mortgage in favour of the appellant mortgaging the three mouzahs conveyed to him by the sale-deed of 1860. That mortgage of 1872 was executed for the purpose, inter alia, of paying the balance of the debt due on L's mortgage.

In a suit brought by the appellant to enforce his mortgage, he contended that he was in any event entitled to fall back upon L's mortgage of 1869.

Held that L's mortgage was extinguished and had not been kept alive for the appellant's benefit, and that he was not, therefore, entitled to fall back upon it (68-9). ALIVE - (Contd.)

Hindu Law -Religious Endowment-Mutt property-(Contd.)

The mortgage bond of 1872 was executed by .W. claiming to be the Mohant of the asthal in his own right and the proprietor of the estates. There is nothing in the bond or in the evidence, or even in the surrounding circumstances to show that . If intended to keep L's mortgage alive, or that he or the appellant intended that the latter should hold that mortgage as an additional security for the loan.

The mortgage to L carried interest at a higher rate than the mortgage of the appellant.

There was no intermediate mortgage between L's mortgage and that to the appellant, and AV had no interest in keeping alive L's mortgage. On the contrary, it was his interest that it should be paid off and extinguished.

Though the amount due to L was paid by the appellant's gomastha, it was paid not by the appellant, but through him as the agent of .W. the payer, and with money lent to .M. upon the mortgage. On such payment the appellant was entitled to a receipt from L. According to the terms of L's mortgage, the payment had to be indorsed upon the bond, and was so indorsed. The fact, therefore, that, after such endorsement, the appellant got back possession of the bond and retained possession of it was not inconsistent with the case that L's mortgage was extinguished, because he must have kept it as a voucher for the payment made by him on behalf of M. Hindu Law-Widow-Mortgage by husband-Mortgage by widow and reversioner for amount due under-Invalidity of.

-Mortgagee's right to fall back upon mortgage by deceased as against reversioner's heirs.

A Hindu mortgaged his five-sixths share of a village and died leaving a widow and a separated nephew who was entitled to the reversion if he survived her. The nephew mortgaged the remaining one-sixth to which he was entitled in his own right, to the same mortgagee. Thereafter the widow and the nephew jointly executed two mortgages of the whole village for the amounts due under the earlier mortgages. In a suit brought upon the later deeds, a decree was passed by the trial court for the full amount but that decree was set aside as against the widow by the High Court in an appeal preferred by her, and the decree of the High Court was affirmed in an appeal to the Privy Council to which the representatives of the nephew, he and the widow having died in the meantime, were parties as reversionary heirs of the last male owner. The decree obtained against the nephew was executed only against his one-fifth share and not against the five-sixths share of the last owner and the amount realised was not sufficient to meet even his own indebtedness. In a suit brought on the original mortgage of the five-sixths share against the representatives of the nephew in whom the property vested on the death of the widow, held that, in the circumstances of the case, the later mortgage did not extinguish the rights of the plaintiff under the mortgage sued upon and that the latter was a subsisting mortgage and plaintiff was entitled to a decree on foot thereof.

Though the mortgagee's intention at the time of the later deed was to accept a new security in lieu of the old one, yet, as this was frustrated by the fact that the later deeds were held not binding on the widow, it was contrary to equity and good conscience that the nephew's heirs should set up the later deeds as a release of the mortgage executed by the last owner.

> Hindu Law - Widow - Mortgage by husband -Mortgage by Widow and reversioner for amount due under -Invalidity of .- (Contd.)

Held further that S. 41 of the Contract Act had no application to the case, because, if the suit mortgage was looked upon as a contract to pay money, it had not been performed, because the amount realised by the mortgagee did not cover even the nephew's debt, while if the suit mortgage was looked upon as a contract to give security, it had not been performed because the nephew's attempt to create a security on the five-sixths share admittedly failed. ### Intention as to-Presumption.

-(See also under this head MORTGAGES, PRIOR AND SUBSEQUENT.)

Adams v. Angell-Rule in.

In Adams r. Angell, it was held that the question whether a mortgage paid off was kept alive or extinguished depended upon the intention of the parties. The Master of the Rolls, in delivering his judgment, stated that, " in a Court of Equity it has always been held that the mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it is extinguished. If it is paid off by a tenant for life without any expression of his intention, it is well established that he retains the benefit of it against the inheritance; for although he has not declared his intention of keeping it alive, it is presumed that his intention was to do so, because it is manifestly for his benefit. On the other hand, when the owner of an estate in fee or in tail pays off a charge, the presumption is the other way, but in either case the person paying off the charge can by expressly declaring his intention either keep it alive or destroy it. If there is no reason for keeping it alive, then, especially in the case of an owner in fee, equity will in the absence of any declaration of intention destroy it; but if there be any reason for keeping it alive, such as the existence of another incumbrance, equity will not destroy it " (70-1). -Circumstances justifying presumption of keeping

When the owner of an estate pays charges on the estate, which he is not personally liable to pay, the question whe ther these charges are to be considered as extinguished or as kept alive for his benefit is simply a question of intention. The owners of certain lands effected 1st and 2nd mostgages on those lands, and a third mortgage on the lands and the crops thereon. In execution of a morey decree obtained against the mortgagors by third parties, P purchased the equity of redemption in the properties, and with the sum of Rs 1,000 paid by him the judgment-debt was satisfied.

The 2nd mortgagee then sued upon his mortgage, making the mortgagors, the third mortgagee, and P, defendants. In execution of the decree obtained by him, the 2nd mortgagee obtained orders for sale of the crops. P or the respondents, his representatives in interest, paid the 2nd mortgagee sums of money and saved the crops from seizure. The 3rd mortgager (appellant) sued on his mortgage, making the mort-gagors, P and the respondents parties. In execution of the decree in his suit the lands were sold out and out freed and discharged from the mortgages. After the payment of the amount due to the 1st mortgagee and the expenses of the sale, there remained a surplus in court of Rs. 1,327 odd. The respondents claimed to be subrogated to the second mortgagee, and in his right to receive the said surplus. Their claim was rested on the ground that at the time of the decree in favour of the 3rd mortgagee there was still due to the 2nd mortgagee Rs. 1,990, that the decree in favour of the 3rd mortgagee gave liberty to the respondents to pay the said sum to the 2nd mortgagee and provided that, by doing so, they (respondents) would be relegated to the rights of that mortgagee, and that they did accordingly make the said payment.

Held, affirming the High Court, that, both by virtue of the express direction in the decree in favour of the 3rd mortgagee and under the general law, the respondents were entitled to stand in the shoes of the 2nd mortgagee not only In respect of the Rs. 1,990 paid by them at the time of the final satisfaction, but also in respect of the several payments

With regard to those three houses, the 2nd of the respondent's mortgages provided that as soon as they were redeemed, that is, as soon as the Bank's possession of them ceased, they would be put in possession of the

The appellant who obtained a money decree against P. attached the nine houses included in the respondent's mortgages and purchased at the sale in execution of his decree the right, title, and interest of P in the said houses. Subsequently he (appellant) paid off the mortgage debt due to the Bank, and took possession of the nine houses.

In a suit brought by the respondent to recover possession of the 9 houses, alleging that he was entitled to possession of the same under the mortgages to him, held that the mortgage to the Bank was not extinguished by the appellant's payment, and that he was entitled to stand in the place of the Bank, and to retain possession of the three houses until the amount paid by him to the Bank was repaid

The delt to the Bank was not paid out of the purchasemoney. The appellant purchased the interest of the mortgagor only, and did not in any way bind himself to pay off that debt. Inapplicability to India of.

The doctrine of Teulmin v. Steere (that the purchaser of an equity of redemption cannot set up a mortgage which he has got in against subsequent incumbrances of which he had notice) is not applicable to Indian transactions, except as the law of justice, equity, and good conscience. And if it rested upon any broad intelligible principle of justice it might properly be so applied. But it rests on no such principle. If it did it could not be excluded or defeated by declarations of intention or formal devices of conveyances, whereas it is so defeated every day. When an estate is burdened by a succession of mortgages, and the owner of an ulterior interest pays off an earlier mortgage, it is a matter of course to have it assigned to a trustee for his benefit as against intermediate mortgagees to whom he is not personally liable (133).

In India the art of conveyancing has been and is of a very simple character. Their Lordships cannot find that a formal transfer of a mortgage is ever made, or an intention to keep it alive ever formally expressed. To apply to such a practice the doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere seems to them likely, not to promote justice and equity, but to lead to confusion, to multiplication of documents, to useless technicalities, to expense, and to litigation (133). They are not prepared to extend its doctrine to India (132). (Sir Richard Couch.) GOKULDOSS GOPALDOSS r. RAMBUX SEVCHAND.

When an estate is burdened by a succession of mortgages and the owner of an ulterior interest pays off an earlier mortgage, and the question arises as to whether that earlier mortgage is kept alive for his benefit as against intermediate mortgagees, the obvious question to ask in the interests of justice, equity, and good conscience, is, what was the intention of the party paying off the charge? He had a right to extinguish it and a right to keep it alive. What was his intention? If there is no express evidence of it, what intention should be ascribed to him? It cannot signify whether the division of interests in the property is by way of life estate and remainder, or by way of successive charges. Whether a mortgage paid off is extinguished or kept alive depends upon the intention of the parties. The ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways shall be assumed to have acted according to his interests. In India the art of conveyancing has been and is of a very simple character. A formal transfer of a mortgage is never made, and an intention to keep it alive is never formally expressed. The obvious question to ask, in the interests of justice, equity and good conscience, is, what was the intention of the party paying off the charge?

Property which had been mortgaged with possession ander a Zurpeshgi deed of 1874 for the sum of Rs. 12,000 was again mortgaged in 1888. February, to a different person under a deed of simple mortgage also for the sum of Rs. 12,000. The said sum of Rs. 12,000 was borrowed by the mortgagor and was lent by the simple mortgagee for the express purpose of paying off the Zurpeshgi debt of Rs. 12,000. The money lent by the simple mortgagee was in accordance with the agreement between her and the mortgagor applied in discharging the Zurpeshgi debt of Rs. 12,000. Thereupon, the then holders of the Zurpeshgi deed, quitted possession and gave up the Zurpeshgi deed, which was delivered to the simple mortgagee. It also appeared that three of the properties comprised in the Zurpeshgi deed had been at dates intermediate between the Zurpeshg, and the deed of simple mortgage of February, 1888, further charged by simple mortgages and that decrees for sale had been obtained in suits brought thereon. In a suit for sale brought by the mortgagee under the simple mortgage of February 1888, held that the Zurpeshgi of 1874 was kept alive for the benefit of the mortgagee of February. 1888, who thereby obtained priority over the intermediate further charges (81-2). -Execution of -Necessity - Acquiescence by mort gagor in mortgagee holding the mortgaged property as his own-Evidence of-Effect of.

On 15-7-1875 a foreclosure decree in the English form was passed. Not being in a position to find the necessary funds the mortgagor gave up possession of one of the mortgaged properties to the mortgagee in December, 1875, hefore the expiry of the six months allowed for payment in the mortgage decree, and the mortgagee and those claiming through him remained in unchallenged possession for 45 years and expended large sums in improving and rebuilding. The mortgagor had executed the mortgage in his capacity of executor, and in 1884 his action was challenged by the beneficiaries in O. S. 428 of 1884. In his written statement in that suit he himself stated that almost all the immoveable properties (which included the mortgaged item referred to above) "had been incumbered by the testator and could not be and were not redeemed, but on the contrary they were sold or taken possession of by the mortgagees in liquidation of their respective claims under decrees.

Held that the Court below was right in concluding that the mortgagor acquiesced in the position that the mortgagee was entitled to hold the item as his own and that it was no longer necessary for the latter to execute the foreclosure decree. On 15-7-1875 a foreclosure decree in the English form was passed. On 23-7-1877, the mortgagee obtained an order on a summons which was unopposed that the decree of 15-7-1875, should be executed by putting the mortgagee in possession of one of the items mortgaged. ever, the mortgagee applied for a warrant ordering the Sheriff to put him in possession, the learned Judge who had made the order refused to sign it, and directed the mortgagee to file a suit if he wished to get possession of the item. He accordingly did file one. The mortgagor by his written statement in that suit pleaded that he had not appeared to show cause against the order to give up possession but delivered up possession to the plaintiff (the mortgagee) who therenpon took possession thereof and has since been and still is in possession thereof, and of the rents and profits issaing thereout."

Held that, in view of that written statement of the mortgagor and the fact that no further attempt was made to redeem the property for over 40 years, the Courts below were fully justified in arriving at the conclusion that the item was surrendered to the mortgagee in execution of the mortgage decree. The form of order given in S. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act contemplates a suit between one mortgagee and the mortgagor only, and should be treated as a common form not to be literally followed in every suit for foreclosure, but to be adopted to the particular circumstances of each case. It does not provide for the exercise by puisne incumbrancers of their successive rights of redemption or for working out the rights of the parties in the event of any prior incumbrancer in front of the mortgagor redeeming the mortgaged property so as to make a complete decree. An appropriate decree for that purpose is well-known in the Chancery Division of the High Court in England, and a form of it will be found in Seton on Decrees. It deserves consideration whether a form of order suitable for use in the Indian Courts might not be adopted in which those rights would be recognised and provision made for the event of their being exercised (130-1). To a suit for foreclosure of a first mortgage, the mortgagor and the subsequent mortgagees of the same property were made parties-defendants. The decree in the suit ordered that, on the defendant paying to the plaintiff or into Court a specified sum of money on a specified date, the plaintiff should deliver up to the defendant all documents in his possession relating to the mortgaged property, and should transfer the property to the defendant free from incumbrances created by the plaintiff, but that, if such payment were not so made, the defendant should be absolutely debarred of all rights to redeem the mortgaged property.

Held that the decree was not adapted to the case (130). The "defendant" in the decree means the mortgagor only. The decree does not provide for the exercise by the puisne incumbrancers of their successive rights of redemption or for working out rights of the parties in the event of any prior incumbrancer in front of the mortgagor redeeming the mortguged property so as to make a complete decree (130-1). ---- Suit to set aside decd-Decree in.

In a suit to set aside a deed of trust executed by an insolvent charging real estate to secure debts alieged to be due from him on the ground that the deed was void as being one executed with intent to defraud and delay the creditors of the insolvent, it was found that the major portion of the amount secured by the deed was not a hour fide debt due by the insolvent and that the deed professing to secure that amount was executed with intent to defraud and delay his creditors. It was argued that the further sum secured by the deed was a boun fide debt due by the insolvent, and that the deed should, therefore, at all events, stand as a security for that amount.

Held, that the deed utterly fell to the ground, and could not be maintained as a security for any sum whatever.

If the deed was executed with a view to defraud and delay creditors, and if the facts which have been referred to above with regard to the major portion of the amount secured by the deed are sufficient to show the deed was executed with that intent, it appears to their Lordships to be utterly impossible for any part of the deed, or any person claiming under those who are parties to that deed, to maintain the deed for any purpose whatever. The deed is one which, in that view of the case, is not executed to secure the further sum, but it is a deed executed to defeat and to delay creditors; the deed, therefore, utterly falls to the ground, and cannot be maintained as a security for any sum whatever (343.4). ### Suit for debt-Mortgage by debtor pending, in consolidation of debts.

-Frandulent if and when.

A certain suspicion attaches to a transaction in which deltas are suddenly amassed, consolidated into one, and a mortgage granted in the nick of time so as to accomplish the complete defeat of an action for debt then pending against the mortgagers. The suspicion becomes the greater when the mortgager is a relation of the mortgager. But, on the other hand, if the debts for which the mortgage is granted cannot be displaced as bona fide debts, and if the mortgage in its authenticity and its execution cannot be impagned, then the consolidation at the particular period would be a price of family policy not contrary to law, although open to full scrutiny in judicial proceedings. Sale or further mortgage.

The suit, which was instituted in 1908, was for redemption of a mortgage dated 1875. In 1879 there was a further advance made by the defendant on the security of the mortgaged property, and evidenced by a parabaik document. The plaintiff contended that this latter document created only a further charge upon the mortgaged property. The defendant's case, on the other hand, was that it was a sale of the mortgaged property (oil well).

Held, reversing the Court below and affirming the trial Judge, that the second transaction was a sale, and that, assuming that the rights of the parties fell to be settled by the first transaction, the suit for redemption would be barred, because the plaintiff's right to redeem would have accrued more than 30 years before suit, and nothing was proved to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. An account was taken of the amount due for principal and interest under a mortgage bond, and an agreement was executed by the mortgagor's sons undertaking to pay Rs. 4,628, then due for arrears of interest under the mortgage, on a certain date, and the principal due under the mortgage in a number of years in certain stated instalments. The agreement provided that interest at a reduced rate was to be paid on the balance of principal remaining unpaid.

Held, on a construction of the agreement, that the mortgage was not entitled to interest on the sum of Rs. 4,628, the arrears of interest due on the mostgage at the date of the agreement (307).

The sum of Rs. 4,628 is carefully distinguished in the agreement from the principal. The parties intended that the sum of Rs. 4.628, which was made up of interest should retain that character. If the creditor thought fit to exact that sum on the specified date he might do so; but if he did not, he could not lie by and charge interest upon it (307). (Sir William H. Maule.) If we cannot make good the deficiency we will pay it with interest at the rate mentioned above at the time of redemption."

In a suit for redemption of the mortgage, held that, on the true construction of the mortgage deed, although the prima facie meaning of cl. 6, namely, that the mortgagee accepted the profits in lieu of interest was no doubt qualified by cl. 11, the latter clause was not to be rejected as being inconsistent with the former one, and that the mortgagors were liable to pay compound interest on the deficiency which they undertook to pay by cl. 11. SUIT FOR.

-Relief prayed for in-Sale of mortgaged properly or personal relief-Decree giving latter relief though former prayed for - Nature of claim not altered by reason

In a suit brought by a mortgagee, the plaint stated that the plaintiff sued only for the interest in arrear, and that a suit for the recovery of the principal and the future interest would be brought later on, and it asked for a decree for the interest in arrear with costs in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants, "recoverable from the mortgaged property and the other property and the persons of the defendants."

Held, that the plaint claimed the recovery of the interest in arrear by sale of the mortgaged property, and not merely a personal relief in respect of the said interest, and that the fact that the decree passed in the suit was not a decree for sale but in the nature of a personal judgment did not alter the effect of the claim. -Subsequent suit for principal-Maintainability-C. P. C., O. 2, R. 2-Effect.

A simple mortgage deed executed on 14-9-1910 created security for the re-payment to the mortgagees of Rs. 14.000 principal and interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per month. It then provided by clause 2 that the interest should be paid on the bond as each month went by, and that if the interest was not paid for six months, the creditor should be competent to realize only the unpaid amount of interest due to him, or the amount of principal and interest both by bringing a suit in Court without waiting for the expiration of the time fixed, and that the mortgagors should take no objection to such proceedings. The time fixed was that mentioned in cl. 7, which provided that if the amount secured by the bond, with interest, should not be paid after the expiration of three years, the creditor should be entitled to realise by bringing a suit for the whole of the amount of the principal and interest, together with other incidental expenses, and again the clause concluded by provision that the mortgagors should have no objection, and, if they took objection to such proceedings, it should be regarded as false. The deed contained no express covenant for the payment of the principal and the interest.

Three years elapsed after the deed had been executed, and no interest was paid. On 16-4-1914, the mortgagee instituted a suit in respect only of the interest that was then due on the bond, namely, the sum of Rs. 3,010, and paid Court-fees only in respect of that sum. The decree made in that suit, however, declared that the amount due to the for principal, interest and costs was mortgagee Rs. 3,270-12-0, and provided that if the defendant paid into Court the amount so declared to be due, which was really only the amount of the interest and costs, on or before 11-2-1915, the mortgagees should deliver up the documents relating to the property, and if required, re-transfer it to the defendant free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the mortgagees or any persons claiming under them. Part 2 of the decree proceeded upon the same footing, and provided that if the money was not paid in there should be a sale, and out of the money realised the claim of Rs. 3.270 should be satisfied, and after that the balance of the money in Court should be paid out to the mortgagor.

The money payable under the decree was paid into court. but the mortgagor never asked for re-transfer of the property, and the property therefore apparently remaining still subject to the mortgage, the representatives of the mort-gagee instituted, on 23-1-1915, the suit out of which the appeal arose, for the amount due under the mortgage for principal and interest less the amount which had been provided by the decree in the prior suit and they sought realisation of the security and consequential relief.

Held that the suit was barred under O. 2, R. 2 of C. P. C. of 1908.

What was the cause of action that the plaintiffs possessed when the first suit was instituted? It was the cause of action due either to the fact that the interest had been unpaid for more than six months, or that the three years had elapsed, and the principal was also unpaid, and in either case they could have sued for realization to provide for the whole amount secured by the deed. The plaintiffs now purported to proceed under cl. 2 of the deed, but even in that case the non-payment of the interest was the sole cause upon which they were entitled to ask either for the limited relief that was sought or the larger relief which they abstained from seeking. It is only important to notice that the only relief that could be sought in both cases was realization of the mortgage security, for the mortgage was a simple mortgage containing no express covenant for the payment of the principal and the interest. O. 2, R. 2(1) of C. P. C. therefore covers the present dispute (13-4). (Lord Buckmaster.)

It does not appear to their Lordships that if a mortgage provides, as mortgages always do in this country, for an independent obligation to pay the principal and the interest, that in a suit brought to obtain a personal judgment in respect of the interest alone the rule would have prevented a subsequent claim for payment of the principal. In such a case the cause of action would have been distinct. The master is, however, different if the non-payment of the interest causes the principal money to become due, as in that case the cause of action—the non-payment of the interest gives rise to two forms of relief which the Cocle provides shall not be split. A mortgage bond of 19-1-1904 provided for payment of the money within two years and for redemption by the mortgagors within that period if they thought fit. It also contained an express promise on the part of the mortgagors to pay interest for the first year, and provided that in default it should be competent to the mortgagee to cancel the fixed term and to realise. Clause 5 of the deed provided : If we pay the interest on the expiry of the first year, we shall pay the interest on the mortgage money after every three months after the expiry of the first year. If by chance we are unable to pay the interest after every three months, we shall pay it after six months. If we do not pay the remaining interest after six months, the mortgagee will be at liberty to cancel the term of two years and to realise with costs all the principal mortgage money with interest by means of a suit from the mortgaged property and our other movealde and immoveable property and on our person. If the mortgagee of his own accord wishes to maintain the term of mortgage, he will have a right to realise only the remaining interest by means of a suit from the said property and our

The interest was paid up to 4-7-1905, but no further payment was made in respect of interest. On 17-11-1908, the mortgagee sued the mortgagors for the recovery of the interest in arrear and prayed for its recovery by sale of the mortgaged property, stating in his plaint that he would sue subsequently for the principal and for the future interest. A decree was passed in that suit which, however, was in the nature of a personal judgment, and was not a decree for sale. The mortgagee got the equity of redemption sold in execution of that decree and realised his decree amount.

In a suit subsequently instituted by the mortgagee on 19-11-1914 asking the full mortgagee's relief in respect of the mortgaged property, held, that O. 2, R. 2 of C. P. C. of 1908 barred the suit.

The amount due for principal and interest under a mortgage bond executed by the deceased father of the respondents with a provision for interest at 12 per cent, per annum was calculated up to a certain date, and for the amount so ascertained to be due, the respondents executed an agreement in favour of the mortgagee, agreeing to pay the amount due for arrears of interest under the said mortgage bond on a specified date, and the amount due for principal thereunder in a number of years, in stated annual instalments. The agreement provided that interest at 9 per cent, per annum should be paid on whatever amount of principal remained in balance each year.

Held, on a construction of the agreement, that interest was to be calculated on the principal amount of the mortgage bond from the time up to which the interest was calculated at the time of the agreement (306).

There is no reason why the sum which was lent at interest, and which continued at interest, with no difference except the modification of taking away one fourth of the interest, and reducing the Re. I per measem to 12 annas per cent, per mensem, should be exempt from paying interest at one rate or another during the whole time that it remains unpaid, and that time will be taken from the time up to which the interest is calculated. From that time the principal sum or so much as remained from time to time unpaid is to carry interest at the rate agreed upon in this instrument, namely, at the reduced rate of 9 per cent. per annum (306). A mortgage bond, executed on 20-3-1873, was as "I, B, .. do declare: -That I owe Rs. 5,000, half of which is Rs. 2,500, to C .. and that, admitting the said debt, I promise that I shall pay the said money, with interest at the rate of Rs. 1-4 per cent. per mensem in two years; that interest shall be paid six-monthly; that in case of default in payment of interest on the expiry of any six months, it will be treated as principal, and being included in the principal, shall bear interest at the said rate; that the compound interest shall also be added six-monthly to the principal."

Their Lordships were not prepared to dissent from the construction placed by the High Court on the bond in respect of there being no covenant by B to pay interest after the fixed period of two years from the date of the bond. although, they observed, it was difficult to suppose that that was the intention of the parties to the bond (201). If I fail to pay off the amount within the fixed term the said bankers shall be competent to realise the amount by any means possible from my person, and the properties mortgaged, and from any other properties belonging to me, and I and my beirs neither have, nor shall we have any objections whatever to it. Until the payment in full of this amount, principal and interest, I shall not transfer, either directly or indirectly, the mortgaged property to any one else, and, if I do, such a transfer shall be deemed to be false and inadmissible. The amounts paid by me should be first credited to the payment of interest, and the balance should be credited to that of the principal and I shall have them entered on the back of the document." No payment of any kind was made under this document and the representatives of C. L. brought a suit on June 19, 1888, for the usual mortgage decree. The courts below disallowed the claim of the plaintiff for interest beyond the one year mentioned in the deed. Held, reversing the decision of the courts below, that, upon a proper construction of the deed, there was a covenant to pay interest at the stipulated rate beyond the one year fixed for the repayment of the principal, and that, consequently, the plaintiff was entitled to interest at the stipulated rate up to the date of the decree of the

Mortgagee-Lease to.

-Rent due under-Set-off of, against mortgage-del -Omission to claim, in suit to enforce mortgage-Suil subsequent claiming set-off-Maintainability-C. P. C. S. 11.

A portion of the property comprised in a mortgage was also leased by the mortgagors to the mortgagees. In 1878 the mortgagees sued upon their mortgage, but, though at that time the mortgagees owed a considerable sum to the mostgagors as and for rent due under the said lease, the mostgagors did not, in defence to the suit, plead that they were entitled to have a general account taken and to have the mortgagee's claim limited to the difference between the amount due to them under their mortgage and the amount due by them for rent under the lease. On the other hand, the mortgagors alleged a specific agreement which they failed to prove that the rents should be set off against the mortgage debt; and they also stated their intention to see separately for the rent due. Accordingly a decree was passed in favour of the mortgagees, without any deduction on account of rents. The mortgagees executed the decree in their favour and purchased the mortgaged property after having obtained leave to bid at the sale held in execution. Meanwhile the mortgagors also obtained a decree for the rent due to them under their said lease.

In a suit subsequently brought by the mortgagors to have the judicial sale set aside, and to have the mortgage debt extinguished by having set-off against it the rents which had already accrued, or might thereafter accrue, and for posses sion of the lands on the expiry of the lease, held that, the alleged equity was a matter which ought to have been made a ground of attack in the suit of 1878 within the meaning of S. 13 of C. P. C. of 1877, and that the mortgagors were therefore barred from insisting on it exceptione rei judicator.

The proper occasion for enforcing the equity now pleaded would have been in defence to the mortgage suit of 1877. That was certainly the suit in which any account to which the mortgagors were entitled, as in a question with the mortgagees, ought to have been taken. But the appellants not only abstained from putting forward any claim to a general accounting; they declared in their pleadings their intention of bringing a separate action for recovery of the rents, a proceeding which would have been wholly unnecessary if the plea which they urge in this appeal had been put forward and given effect to (113-4). Test-Suit to enforce mort gage-Set-off of rent due under lease against mortgage debt -Mortgagor's right of.

The appellants were owners of certain shares of 20 mouzahs in two talooks. Those shares were sold in 1867 for arrears of Government revenue to one B. That sale was, however, set aside in an action brought by the appellants. The respondents held 6 of those mouzahs in lease before the sale to B. In consideration of the pecuniary and other assistance which they gave to the appellants in their suit against B, the appellants, during the dependence of B's appeal to the Privy Council against the decision of the High Court in favour of the appellants, executed a mortgage to the respondents mortgaging their interest in the said twenty mouzahs. Again, after the appellants obtained possession under the decree of the High Court and pending B's appeal to the Privy Council the parties entered into an agreement by which, in consideration of assistance already given and to be given by the respondents, the appellants undertook, in the event of B's appeal to the Privy Council being unsuccessful, to renew the lease of the 6 mouzahs, to let to the respondents the remaining 14 mouzahs under a tioca pottah for 15 years, and to grant them a mokurrari lease of 134 bighas. This agreement was nearly two years after the date of the mortgage aforesaid. A few months afterwards, viz., in February, 1874, shortly after the dismissal of B's appeal, the appellants executed a sunnud, authorizing the respondents to collect the rents of their mouzalis for the year ending in September, 1874, the respondents accounting to them for their receipts, under deduction of costs and charges. In July, 1874, appellants, in terms of their previous agreement, renewed the lease of the 6 mouzahs for fifteen years from September, 1874, and granted the respondents a ticca pottah, for the same period of the remaining 14 mouzahs, at a stated yearly rent, subject to future adjudgment. They also gave, as stipulated, a mokurrari lease of the 13t bighas.

Semble in a suit by the respondents to enforce the mortgage in their favour the appellants would have an equity to have a general account taken of the transactions between them, and to have the amount of rent payable to them under the leases set off against the amount payable by them under the mortgage (113).

The mortgage bond, the agreement, followed by the granting of the leases therein stipulated, and the sunnud, were all parts of one complex transaction, the objects of which were to enable the appellants to recover their property from B, and to secure to the respondents repayment of moneys which they had advanced as well as remuneration for services rendered (113). due under a simple mortgage or charge, if the latter relates to the same property.

A mortgage, which was no doubt usufructuary, provided for payment of interest at a specified rate, and contained covenants on the part of the mortgagor to pay both principal and interest. By a muchilika or counter-part lease of the same date as the mortgage, the mortgagor took a lease from the mortgagee of a portion of the mortgaged property. The two documents were parts of one transaction, the lease being in the nature of machinery for the purpose of realising the interest due on the mortgage.

In a suit for redemption of the mortgage and possession brought by an assignee of the mortgagor's interest against an assignee of the mortgage, held that, the defendant was entitled to add the arrears of rent due under the lease deed to his claim in the suit, with interest thereon, from the due date of the mortgage.

To drive the mortgagee to a separate suit to enforce the charge he has in respect of the arrears of rent due under the lease deed would lead to a circuity of action and would be centrary to the provisions of O. 34, R. 1 of C. P. C. which requires all persons having an interest in the mortgage security to be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage. Further, if the defendant did not set up his charge for the arrears of rent in this suit serious questions might well arise as to whether he would be entitled subsequently to bring a suit to enforce that charge (77-8). A mortgage deed, by which several properties were mortgaged, provided that each property could be separately redeemed in the month of June of any year on payment of the amount entered against it in the deed provided always that the interest on the whole mortgage money had been paid or tendered at the time of such redemption. The mortgage deed also provided that Government revenue should be deducted in the first instance from the entire income of the mortgaged properties, that is, that Government revenue should be deducted before any credit for interest was given at all. The consideration stated in the mortgage deed was Rs. 35,000, but only a sum of Rs. 30,984 was actually advanced. In a suit for redemption of two of the mortgaged items brought by the purchasers thereof from the mortgagor, the High Court held that as only Rs. 30,984 was advanced instead of Rs. 35,000, the equitable method of dealing with the case would be to distribute the reduction of principal over each item of property specified at the foot of the mortgage.

Held, that the High Court was right in the view which it took.

As regards the Government revenue paid by the mortgagees with interest thereon, the High Court held, that the whole of the said sum should not be added for the purpose of testing the amount payable by the purchasers, but that it should be equitably distributed as against the purchasers in the same way as the principal amount was to be distri-

Held, that the view of the High Court was not correct.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the appellants against the respondents, and against one B. The appellants sought to recover a sum of Rs. 79,655 as principal and interest which they alleged to be due to them in respect of a mortgage executed by B on 20-5-1873, the appellants alleging that, at that date B adjusted his account and executed a mortgage for securing Rs. 3,49,504-4. The mortgage stated that there had been an adjustment of accounts between B and the appellants, and it was given to secure the money which was then due on the account, together with a sum of Rs. 90,000, to be advanced by the appellants to B, from May, 1873, to October of the said year. The respondents, were purchasers of part of the mortgaged property under a conveyance dated January, 1875, another part of it having been previously sold. They objected that the whole of the sum of Rs. 90,000 was not advanced before the 1st of October, 1873, but a portion only was advanced, leaving a sum of about Rs. 30,000, which they said was subsequently advanced, and was therefore not covered by the mortgage. The way in which the respondents sought to avail themselves of that objection was that they said that if they were right in that contention, and the mortgage only covered what was actually advanced before the 1st of October, 1873, the accounts shewed that the whole of the mortgage was satisfied, and consequently that the appellants were not entitled to recover upon it as they claimed.

Heid, that the contention was untenable (17).

The soundness of the contention depends upon the construction of the mortgage seed. Their Lordships think that the mortgage was intended to cover the whole advance of Rs. 90,000; and whether it was advanced before the 1st of October, 1873, or not. if the parties, that is B. and the mortgagees, thought fit between themselves to allow a portion of that Rs. 90,000, not to be immediately advanced, but to remain in the hands of the appellants in a deposit account in such a way that he could draw upon them and obtain the money at any time, then it was really covered by the mortgage, and it is not an answer to the claim of the mortgagees in respect of the Rs. 90,000, that the whole of it was not advanced before 1st October, 1873 (17). #### APPORTIONMENT OF.

Basis proper of-Value of items - Revenue assessed upon them.

Plaintiffs, purchasers of the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged properties, brought a suit for redemption of the portion purchased by them on payment of their proportionate part of the mortgage debt. To the suit the mortgagee, who had also purchased the equity of redemption in another portion of the mortgaged premises, and the purchasers of other portions thereof, were made defendants. The mortgagee contended that the apportionment of the mortgage debt should be made according to the amount and ascertained values of the several mouzahs mortgaged, and not according to the revenue assessed on and payable in respect of such mouzahs to Government. With reference to this contention, their Lordships made the following observations:

Their Lordships do not deny that there is some force in this objection. The proportion of the debt chargeable on each village ought to vary according to the actual value of the village; and the amount of Government revenue assessed on a village may not always be a correct criterion of its actual value (408).

On the other hand, there might be a difficulty in applying the principle contended for by the mortgagee to cases in which the amount payable by a mortgagor seeking to redeem, is not ascertained, as in this country, by inquiry and account, but must be calculated and tendered or brought into Court by him before the commencement of the suit. Their Lordships, however, do not feel called upon to affirm the correctness of the principle adopted in the Courts below, or to give any opinion which may have the effect of sanctioning its adoption in other cases, because they are clearly of opinion, that the objection is not one which this appellant is now entitled to take (408-9). -Doctrine of -Application true of.

The true application of the doctrine of apportionment is this, that the Court may direct accounts, to which the purchasers of fragments of the equity of redemption must be parties, with a view of settling between them all what is the proportion to be charged upon each fragment. It is quite a new thing to hold that the purchaser of a single fragment of the equity of redemption may come without bringing the other purchasers before the Court, and have an account as between himself and the mortgagee alone, so that the mortgagee may be paid off piecenteal. Such a law would result in great injustice to the mortgagee. It would put him to a separate suit against each purchaser of a fragment of the equity of redemption though purchasing without his consent, and he would have separate suits against each of them. and suits in which no one of the parties would be bound by anything which took place in a suit against another. -Mode of -Objection by mortgagee to-Pray Council appeal-Maintainability for first time in.

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that this objection (to the mode in which the mortgage-debt has been apportioned in a suit for redemption by the purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption) is not one which the appellant (mortgagee) is now entitled to take. They cannot find any trace of its having been taken in the Courts below. The written statement of the appellant (mostgagee) does not raise the question. On the contrary, it seems to adopt the same principle of apportionment as that adopted by the plaintiff. By yielding to the objection now for the first time taken, and re-opening the whole account, their Lordships would do great injustice to the respondents, and make a very dangerous precedent (409). Four mouzahs, including mouzah A, were first mortgaged by their owner in favour of G under a kut-kobala. Subsequently those and three other mouzahs were hypothecated to G. A notice of foreclosure was served under the first moregage. Later, the 1st respondent purchased the interest of the mortgagor in mouzah A at a revenue sale. Thereafter G assigned his interest under the two mortgages to the 2nd respondent upon trust to prevent the merger of his rights under them, and to keep them alive for the benefit of the 1st respondent, and empowered him to continue and prosecute the pending foreclosure proceedings, and the name of the 1st respondent was substituted for that of G in the foreclosure proceedings. More than 12 months after the notice of foreclosure had been given by G, the respondents sued upon the first mortgage only, praying for an order giving to the 1st respondent a proprietary right based upon foreclosere in the three mouzahs other than A. and with respect to A for a declaratory decree confirming his possesssion of it, on a right derived from foreclosure of mortgage.

During the pendency of that suit, the respondents brought another suit in another Court, within whose jurisdiction the three additional mouzahs mortgaged by the second mortgage were situated, against the defendant to recover the principal and interest under that kut-kobala. The claim in that suit was against the defendant personally.

Held that the plaintiffs had no right to claim mouzah d by foreclosure (222).

With respect to mouzah A, the 1st respondent, having purchased the equity of redemption, was bound to contribute to the payment of both the mortgages in the proportion of the value of mouzah A to the other properties, and he could not free himself from this obligation by foreclosing mouzah A under the first mortgage only (222). In execution of a decree obtained by a subsequent mortgagee of mourah N, the said mouzah was sold subject to the appellant's mortgage, and was purchased by the appellant himself. The value of the said mouzah, beyond the purchase-money paid by the appellant, exceeded the amount due upon the appellant's mortgage.

Held, that it must be taken that the mortgage debt of the appellant was satisfied by the purchase of mouzah N and the value of that estate, and that the appellant, having thus obtained the full amount of his debt could no longer avail himself of any other part of his security (96). The mortgage was only a security for the debt, and when it was satisfied, there was an end of any right to resort to the further securities held by the appellant (96). (Sir Montagne E. Smith.) DOOLI CHAND v. RAM KISHEN (1881) 8 I. A. 93=7 C. 648 (651)= SINGH. 4 Sar. 245=Bald. 357=3 Suth. 734.

In a suit for sale based upon a mortgage, it appeared that B, the mortgagor, was a very young man leading a most immoral life, that he mortgaged the ancestral property of his family to N, under whom the plaintiffs claimed, and gave N possession practically of all his property, which included other villages not mortgaged to N. A considerable part of the property of which N. had obtained possession including some of the mortgaged villages, was sold by N. and some of the mortgaged villages were purchased by him N did not nor did the plaintiffs render accounts of what had been received by him from or in respect of any of the property, not even of that which had been mortgaged to M family, on whose behalf he acted. the influence of N, an unscrupulous man, who exercised that influence regardless of the interest of B and his infant son, The plaintitts were unable to prove that anything was due under the mortgage in suit.

Held, that the case was an exceptional one in which it was for the plaintiffs to prove that the mortgage had not been satisfied and what, if anything, was due under the mortgage before they could get a decree for sale.

This is not an ordinary case of a suit for sale bosed on a mortgage in which it would be for the defendant, the mortgagor, to prove that nothing remained due under the mortgage if that was his defence, (Sir John Edge.) ### Mortgagee's retention of, under agreement to account for same to mortgagor.

-Mortgagor's suit claiming amount unaccounted for in case of-Onus of proof in.

The plaintiffs-respondents borrowed from the defendantsappellants Rs. 29,000 upon a Zurpeshgee lease, the effect of which was that it was a lease for 15 years at a rent calculat ed to cover the interest on the Rs. 29,000 at 9 p. c. and also the Government revenue payable on the property leased, the lessees and mortgagees undertaking to keep down the Government revenue, and to pay themselves such interest, and being at liberty to make what further profits they could out of the Zurpeshgee lease. At the end of the fifteen years the principal sum was to be paid down in a lump sum and the property redeemed. That was the mortgage transaction. It was, however, admitted that it was further arranged between the parties that that sum of Rs. 29,000 should not be paid by the mortgagees into the hands of the mortgagers, but should be transferred to their account in the books of the former, to be applied, as occasion should require, in satisfaction of their judgment and other debts. The result of that arrangement was to make the mortgagees accounting parties to the mortgagors for Rs. 29,000.

It was, however, alleged by the plaintiffs, though the transaction was denied by the defendants, that the Rs. 29,000 proving insufficient to pay all the debts that were to be paid, one of the plaintiffs borrowed from his father-in-law a further sum of Rs. 3157-8, and paid it into the bank of the defendants, the latter giving a deposit note in the name of the father in-law, but treating the money as the money of the plaintiffs. The effect of that transaction, if it did take place, was of course to increase the sum for which the bankers were accountable by the amount of the further deposit.

In a suit brought by the plaintiffs claiming upwards of Rs. 10,000 as unaccounted for by the defendants, held that it lay upon the plaintiffs to prove the payment of the additional sum of Rs. 3157-8; and that it lay upon the defendants to disprove that payment, if the other side succeeded in establishing a prima facie case against them; and in any case to account for so much of the Rs. 29,000 as the plaintiffs did not admit to have been been paid (133). for twelve annas, on these conditions, that the holders of the mortgage are to receive in redemption the whole of the produce of the said village, about Rs. 3000 or 3200, and after allowing for interest, the remainder will go for the purpose of liquidating the principal, and they shall continue so to receive and appropriate the annual produce until the whole of their demand be liquidated. The risk of collecting the income, and of any deficiency in the revenues, is upon our heads." That is, the mortgagors, "And we do further declare, that the holders of the said mortgage shall station a Mehta (or clerk) of their own in the said village for the purpose of making the collections; and we the mortgagors, so long as this property remains in mortgage we do agree to give him a monthly salary of Rupces five, and his daily food, so long as we can afford to do so."

Actual possession was taken by virtue of the mortgage. A Mehta was appointed, who was paid by the mortgagors, and who might have received the rents and profits of the village. He probably did receive the rents and profits of the village for a year or two, but afterwards permitted the mortgagors to receive them for four or five years afterwards.

Held that, on the true construction of the deed of mortgage, there was no binding contract between the mortgagors and mortgagee, binding the latter to apply the rents and profits to the payment of the debt, and that the mortgagee did not therefore forfeit his right to payment in consequence of having allowed the mortgagors themselves to take possession of the rents and profits during some of the years during which his Mehta was in possession.

The deed merely empowered the mortgagee to satisfy himself, just as an English mortgagee might, by taking possession of the rents and profits of the estate. If an English mortgagee chooses to forego the benefit of receiving the rents and profits, and permits the mortgagor to take them, it would have no effect as between him and the mortgagor; he would have a full right to recover his debt by reason of the deed (500). #### Tender of-Waiver of.

-What amounts to-Statement by mortgager under an erroneous view of his rights that tender was unnecessary-

The practice of the Courts is not to require a party to make a formal tender where from the facts stated or from the evidence it appears that the tender would have been a mere form, and that the party to whom it was made would have refused to accept the money.

To a letter written by the purchaser from the mortgagor of the mortgaged property asking to be informed of the amount due to the mortgagee under his mortgage so that the purchaser might send respectable men with money and pay off the mortgage debt, the mortgagee sent a reply to the effect that there was no need for the purchaser to pay anything because the rights which the mortgagee had conferred upon him under the mortgage had vested in him the whole of the mortgaged property and the mortgage was consequently at an end. Held that the letter could not be construed as equivalent to any such clear release to the mortgagor of his obligation to tender the money as was required in order to justify him in not having presented it for receipt (46.8).

The view put forward by the mortgagee in his reply was an erroneous view based upon invalid provisions in the deed of mortgage, but it by no means followed from that, that if in fact the tender had been made of the whole of the principal money and interest which was due up to that date, the mortgagee would not have accepted it. The fact is that this letter contains a reason why the tender is unnecessary, but the reason was wrong because the right to buy according to the terms which the mortgage deed contained was a right which was not enforceable in law. But it is on that hypothesis that they say there is no need for payment to be made. If this were not accepted as correct, there is nothing to relieve the purchaser from making the tender (47-8), (Lord Buckmaster.) CHALIKANI VENKATAKAYANIM P. ZEMINDAR OF TUNI. (1922) 50 I. A. 41=

Debutter land excluded from-Area of-Admission in mortgage deed as to.

-Evidence to rebut-Thakbust map made in survey prior to mortgage if sufficient.

A mortgage deed executed in respect of a revenue-paying mouzsh exempted debutter land within the limits of the mouzah, the deed specifying the number of bigas making the area of the debutter. In a suit for possession of the property comprised in the mortgage by the purchaser thereof in execution of a decree obtained on foot of the mortgage, the mortgagors contended that they were not bound by or limited to the area of the debutter mentioned in the mortgage deed, but that they were entitled to any area in excess of that amount which they could shew that they had previously held as debutter. The High Court decided in favour of the mortgagors relying upon a thakbust map made in a Survey in 1869 (i.e., before the date of the mortgage deed). The learned Judges were of opinion that the thakbust map should be taken as the basis of the decision of the question of the identity of the debutter land, unless it was displaced by any better evidence, and they held that it lay upon the plaintiff to rebut the evidence of the map.

The statements in that map of lands being debutter appeared on the face of it to have been made, as was pointed out. by agents on behalf of the proprietor of the mouzah and the principal tenants, in the presence of the agents of the holders of estates in the neighbouring mouzahs. The amin who made the map had to lay down boundaries, but had no authority to decide what lands were debutter.

Held that the thakbast map was of no weight against the admission in the mortgage deed (148.9). The value of the map must depend upon the inquiry which was made by the amin, and the statements of what lands were debutter may have been and probably were given by the defendant's agents, no one being present to question the accuracy of them. S. 83 of the Evidence Act has not the effect which the High Court gives to it, of making those statements evidence (148). (Sir Richard Couch.) MATI BIBI JARAO KUMARI P. RANI LALONMONI.

The question was whether the village of B was included in a mortgage in favour of the appellant.

After conveying by specific description the property originally offered in security, the mortgage deed threw in as an additional subject of conveyance "all other (if any) the mauzas, mahals, villages, lands, and shares of and interest in mauzas, mahals, villages, and lands comprised in the said sanad". It was admitted that the village of B was comprised in that Sanad.

Held, reversing the Court below, that the village of B was included in the mortgage.

The village of B passed by words, which include every thing that the sanad comprised. There is no contradictory recital. After noticing the original application for the loan the narrative winds up by saying that the Bank (the appellant) have agreed to make the advance on having repayment of the sum advanced and interest thereon secured "in manner hereinaster appearing." That recital points to the operative part of the deed as complete in itself, without anything in the preamble to control or confuse the natural and ordinary meaning of the language used. There is surely nothing so very strange in finding that a mortgage deed as finally settled contains something more than the original security proposed. (Lord Macnaghten.) The mortgagors shall not in any event enter into any engagements or execute any documents for the alienation of any part of the mortgaged properties without the written concurrence of the mortgagees, it being the intention of the parties and being of the essence of the negotiations for the grant of the said loan that the mortgagors shall in no way interfere in the management of the said mortgaged premises. The managers or manager shall out of the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises as the same shall be received, in the first place, pay all the charges payable in respect of the mortgaged premises; in the second place, pay to the mortgagees interest up to the date fixed for payment, and thereafter the annual sums required for the service of the said loan, and, in the third place, pay all costs and charges for management and realisation of rents, etc., and shall hold any surplus of the said issues and profits in trust for the

There is no doubt that the mortgage is in some respects peculiar in its drafting and that it conferred very wide powers on W & G as managers, but the mortgagor executed the mortgage and there is nothing to suggest that he was misled and did not thoroughly understand the contract which he made, or granted the mortgage under undue influence or from pressure (271).

IV & G were in possession as the agents and managers of the mortgagor and not of the mortgagee. The company (mortgagees) never was in possession, nor was it liable for any default or any waste or mismanagement or any negligence of W & G as managers. Property subject to a mortgage was sold in execution of a decree obtained by a third party and purchased by the mortgagee himself. The heirs of the mortgagor thereupon sued the mortgagee-purchaser for redemption of his mortgage and for accounts, ignoring the sale altogether. The mortgagee-purchaser relied upon his execution purchase and pleaded that the legality of the sale could not be impeached in the suit as framed, and that the claim for redemption could not be maintained unless a suit was brought to set aside the sale. He further suggested that he had an answer to the contention that the sale was illegal, if it should be set up by the mortgagor's heirs. Nevertheless the plaintiffs took their stand upon their original case that the sale was a nullity, and did not, either in the trial court, or in the lower appellate court, or even in the High Court in second appeal apply for leave to remodel their suit by making it a suit to set aside the sale or to add the decreeholder as a party.

Held, that under the circumstances, leave could not be given by the Privy Council to the plaintiffs to amend their plaint by adding a prayer to set the sale aside (227.8). (Lord Hobbouse.) MALKARJUN c. NARAHARI.

The second mortgagee had obtained possession of the mortgaged property under a decree in a suit instituted by him against the mortgagors; but they were dispossessed by a prior mortgagee in virtue of a decree obtained by him.

Possession of-(Contd)

The mortgagors, however, discharged the prior mortgage and entered into possession of the mortgaged property, and the plaintiffs' attempt to get back possession from them proved unavailing. They, therefore, instituted the suit for possession.

The first Court decreed the suit, giving the plaintiffs a decree not only for the recovery of the possession of the mortgaged property, but also to recover interest on the mortgage amount for the period of their dispossession

Held modifying the decree of the first court, that the plaintiffs were only entitled to a decree for the possession of the property (21-2).

In that case the plaintiffs having got possession of the land, the question will remain open until the defendants seek to redeem the land. Then the question will arise, how much is due to the plaintiffs as the second mortgagees, and for what amount they are entitled to hold possession of the land under their mortgage (22) (Six Barnes Postock,) NARAIN SINGH : SHIMBHOO SINGH.

The mortgagees appealed to the High Court against a decree of the Sub-Judge which awarded them less than the amount claimed by them. Pending the appeal the mostgaged property was sold in execution of the Sull-Judge's decree and was purchased by the mortgagees themselves In the appeal the High Court passed a decree dated 24-1-1905 for the whole of the amount claimed by the mortgagees, allowing the mortgagors six months' time for redemption, and directing that, in the event of their not redeeming within the time allowed, the property should be sold. In the interval the mortgagees had applied for possession consequent upon their purchase, but that application had been rejected by the Sub-Judge. The mortgagees appealed from that order, and in that appeal an order was made by the High Court on 18-4-1904 deciding that the mortgagees were entitled to possession. That order was allowed to become final.

On an application made by the mortgagors on 19-5-1904 claiming restoration to possession by setting aside the sale in execution of the Sub-Judge's decree under which the mortgagees had purchased the property, held that the order of 18-4-1904 could not be treated as null and void and was binding on the parties, and that under it the mortgagees were entitled to retain possession of the property (Lord Macnaghten.) gager and possession obtained by him - Suit by second mortgagee in case of.

The plaintiffs were the representatives of a second mortgagee of certain property, and in 1872 they instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose to recover the said property from the representatives of the mortgagor. The question was whether such a suit was maintainable at all and whether it was within time.

The second mortgagee had in August 1846 obtained a decree putting him in possession of the mortgaged property. In October, 1847, however, a prior mortgagee obtained a decree for possession and ousled the second mortgagee. In September, 1870, the mortgagors paid off the prior mortgagee and obtained possession of the property. The plaintiffs, as heirs of the second mortgagee, thereupon claimed a right to possession by virtue of the decree of 1846, but it was held that they were not entitled to execution under that decree, and they, therefore, instituted the suit for possession.

The High Court held that no cause of action accrued to the plaintiffs by reason of the satisfaction of the debt of the prior mortgagee, and the recovery of possession of the property by the mortgagors or their heirs. The High Court was of opinion that the remedy of the second mortgagee or his heirs upon dispossession was to sue within the proper period for the recovery of the money lent by the second mortgagee to the mortgagors. The High Court, therefore, held that the suit for possession was not maintainable and that it was harred by fimitation.

Held, reversing the High Court, that the plaintiffs were entitled to see for possession and that the suit was not baryed by fimitation (19).

When the first mortgagee was paid off in 1870 the title of the plaintiffs, which had all along been a good title as against the mortgagors, was a valid title as against every one. Then when their title became a valid and a good title, the mortgagors had no right to enter upon the possession of their land. But the mortgagors did enter into possession of it, and keep the po-session from the plaintiffs; and it appears to their Lordships, that having the right and title to the land when the first mortgage was paid off, the entry of the mortgagors upon that land to which the plaintiffs had obtained a right under the second mortgage gave them a cause of action against the mortgagors, the defendants. The plaintiffs having a good title when the first mortgagees were paid off in 1870, their cause of action accrued when the plaintiffs (defendants?) after that period entered into possession of the estate to which they had no title. The suit is therefore within time (19), (Sir Barnes Peaceck.) NA-RAIN SINGH : SHIMBHOO SINGH. (1876) 4 I. A. 15 = 1 A. 325 (328-30) = 3 Sar. 673 = 3 Suth. 357.

Purchaser of-Private purchaser-Execution purchaser.

-Position and rights of -Distinction.

Their Lordships think that the title of a judgment creditor, or a purchaser under a judgment decree, cannot be put on the same footing as the title of a mortgagor, or of a person claiming under a voluntary alienation from the mostgagor. They are of opinion that the possession of a purchaser, under such circumstances, is really not the possession of a person holding in priority (privity?) of the mortgagor, or holding so as to be an acknowledgment of the continuance of the title of the mortgagee. The possession, which the purchaser supposed he acquired, was a possession as owner. He thought he was acquiring the absolute title to the property, and that he was in possession as absolute owner. Their Lordships are assuming that no notice was proved of the existence of the mortgage title given to, or -Charge on property saved-Mortgagee's right to.

The revenue due to the Government for a Talook which had been mortgaged to one N was not paid by the widow of the mortgager who then held the talook as his heirese. The talook would in consequence have been put up for sale by the Government Collector, and would have been sold according to Act 1 of 1845, discharged from the mortgage and from all other incumbrances. To save the mortgage and the Talook the mortgagee's widow, who had in that character become entitled to all the rights of her husband as mortgagee of the Talook, deposited the amount in arrear with the Collector.

Held that, considering that the payment of the revenue by the mortgagee would prevent the Talook from being sold, it would be difficult to come to any other conclusion than that the person who had such an interest in the Talook as entitled him to pay the revenue due to the Government, and did actually pay it, was thereby entitled to a charge on the Talook as against all persons interested therein for the amount of the money so paid (258). I had an equitable mortgage of certain villages which stood in the name of the son of the mortgagor. Pending a suit to enforce the mortgage, the mortgagor died and his son was brought on record as his legal representative. The son did not set up any title in himself to the mortgaged property, and in the suit a decree was passed establishing the mortgage against the mortgaged property on the footing that it was the property of the mortgagor.

In the interval between the date on which the son was brought on record as the legal representative of the mortgagor, and the date of the decree in the mortgage suit, the Collector brought the mortgaged property to sale for arrears due by the son treating the property as the unencumbered estate of the son. The Collector had ample notice of fr mortgage claim against the property, but nevertheless, he suppressed all mention of the mortgage. At the sale held by the Collector the property was purchased by third parties.

After the decree in his suit, / filed the suit out of which the appeal arose against the Collector and the auction-perchasers, claiming to be entitled to have the sale proceeds of the property in the hands of the Government applied in satisfaction of his mortgage debt.

Appellants were the representatives of a purchaser of the suit property at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained on a mortgage thereof by a Mahomedan widow. The widow was only a benamidar for her husband, and was not therefore competent to deal with the property. It appeared. however, that, by certain acts and declarations of his, her son had estopped himself from questioning the validity of the mortgage to the extent of his share in the mortgaged property as against the mortgagee himself. It was contended for the son that the estoppel against the mortgagee would not avail the execution purchaser of the suit property, because the latter was at the time of his execution purchase fully aware of the circumstance that the wislow was only a benamidar and had no title to convey.

Hdd, that, as the mortgage was effectual as a valid title to the mortgagee, under which, in default of payment of the money lent, he was entitled to sell the property, it followed that any purchaser from him under a sale regularly carrie! out would acquire a valid title to the property, even though he were fully aware that the widow was only a benamidar and had no title to convey (214-5).

In any question with the son or his representatives, the mortgagee had obtained a valid mortgage, and as he had himself a valid title so he could give a good title to a purchaser under a mortgage sale, whatever might be the state of knowledge of the person purchasing (220). -Suit against them on foot of his being a-Relief in. on basis of his being a mere co-mortgagor and entitled to contribution-Grant of.

Plaintiff, one of the executants of a deed of simple mortgage, sued the defendants, the other executants thereof, for the recovery of the whole amount, principal and interest, payable under the deed on the ground that he was merely a surety in the matter of the mortgage, that he had paid to the mortgagee the whole of the amount due thereunder, and that, as a representative of the mortgagee, he was entitled to all his rights. The plaint prayed that the suit amount might be made a charge upon the mortgaged proporties. The High Court found that plaintiff was not a mere surety and beld that, as he came into court with a false case, he was not entitled even to a decree for defendants' share of the amount paid by him to the mortgagee. On appeal to the Privy Council, held that, as plaintiff was undoubtedly entitled to recover defendants' share of what he paid, and, as the pleadings were wide enough to cover such a claim, a decree ought to have been passed in his favour for such share and the amount decreed ought to have been charged on defendants' interest in the mortgaged property. -Debt assigned by mortgagor to mortgages at time of mortgage but negligently left uncollected by mortgagee-His liability to mortgagor for.

At the time of a second mortgage, the mortgagoes executed another deed to the mortgagee by which they assigned to him a debt due to them from a third person. In a suit by the mortgagee to enforce his mortgage, the courts below debited him with the amount of the assigned debt. Plaintiff contended that he ought to be debited with the amount, only if and when the same was actually received by him. Held by their Lordships that it lay upon the plaintiff to use reasonable diligence to recover the assigned debt from the debtor and that no serious attempt having been made by him to recover any portion of it, he was rightly debited with the same in taking the accounts (182-3). In a suit brought to recover the balance of principal and interest due under a mortgage against the mortgagor and the purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property subsequent to the date of the mortgage, it appeared that, prior to the date of the said sale of the portion of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor had settled an account with the mortgagees, and the whole of the matters between them had

The rule which declared that redemption should not be taken away until proceedings for foreclosure had been adopted, was not a matter of the lex loci of the Punjauh, it was a matter of general equity which had been enacted in the Provinces of Bengal by the Regulation of 1798, and the Regulation of 1800. They were consolidated in effect and introduced into the Punjauls. They were not the lex loci of the Punjaub. Those rules which were applicable to the lex loci of the Punjauls were not necessary to be introduced into Oudh, but this not being one of the particulars of the lex loci of the Punjauls, it would appear that, as a general rule and principle of equity, to be acted upon in cases between mortgagor and mortgagee, it was one of those rules which were expressly intended (by the letter of the Government of India to the Chief Commissioner of Oudh after the annexation declaring that the Punjaub rules were to be considered in force in Oadh) to be passed and to take effect in Oudh. There can be no doubt that it was the intention of the Governor-General that the principle of the Punjaub rules, so far as they related to redemption and foreclosure of mortgages, should be introduced into Oudh.

In a suit to redeem certain lands in Oudh mortgaged shortly after the Province had been annexed by the British Government, held that the effect of the letter of the Government of India to the Chief Commissioner of Oudh after the annexation was to introduce into Oudh the principle of the Punjub rules relating to redemption and foreclosure of mortgages, res., that a mortgager who mortgaged should not be debarred from his right to re-leem unless a foreclosure had taken place. On 31-8-1872, an agreement was entered into between the widow and R, the presumptive reversionary heir of her husband, whereby she surrendered her interest in her husband's estate to R, upon condition that he was to pay her an allowance of Rs 24,000 for her maintenance, and was to pay off her liabilities. On 31-3-1876, the appellant instituted a suit on the bond against the widow and R. In that suit the High Court, on appeal, by their decree dated 2-7-1878, held the widow personally liable for the amount covered by the bond with interest thereon, and held the mortgage not to be binding upon the estate. An appeal to the Privy Council against the decree of the High Court was dismissed in 1880. In 1884 the appellant sought to execute, against R and the properties in his possession, the personal decree obtained against the widow, who was dead. The executing court held that the decree could not be executed against R, except in respect of personal property of the

No relief was, however, claimed against R personally, though it was perfectly competent for the appellant to have alleged in that suit the personal liability of R in consequence of the agreement which he had entered into with the widow. In that suit the mortgage was held to be not binding upon the estate, and only a personal decree was given against the

In a suit instituted by the appellant against R after the death of the widow, praying to have him declared fiable, under his agreement with the widow, to satisfy the decree obtained against the widow on the bond, held that the suit offended against the principle of res-indicate laid down in the C.P.C, of 1882, and was consequently barred (237).

The present ground of attack was a good ground of attack in the sait of 1876, because the money had not been paid in September, 1875, the date named in the bend. But his suit was in no way based upon this

Held that it was not open to the appellant on the plaint framed as above stated to ask for any decree other than a personal decree for the payment of the amount due on the bond, and that he was not entitle to rely on his second bond

Though this Committee is always disposed to give a liberal construction to pleadings in the Indian Courts, so as to allow every question fairly arising on the case made by the pleadings to be raised and discussed in the suit, yet this liberality of construction must have some limit. A plaintiff cannot be entitled to relief upon facts or documents not stated or referred to by him in his pleadings, and the only thing that can be rightly insisted on by the plaintiff here is a decree for payment against the 1st respondent (473.4). The question was whether the purchaser at a sale of mortgaged property held by the mortgagee under a power of sale in an ordinary form had notice or knowledge of the depreciatory character of a condition in the conditions of sale. The Court of appeal held that the purchaser must be deemed to have had such notice or knowledge, by reason of the fact that, some days after the contract of sale was completed, the purchaser instructed the mortgagee's solicitor to act for him in the preparation of the deed of conveyance, and that that solicitor knew enough of the real title to shew that the condition in question was unjustifiable

Held, that the Court of appeal erred in so holding (184-5). When the contract of sale was signed the transaction was completed so far as it vested in contract, and the rights and liabilities of the parties arising out of that contract were ascertained and were enforceable. Down to that point the attorney was not acting for the purchaser.

The only thing in which he did so act was the subsequent preparation of the conveyance. His knowledge was not acquired in the matter for which he was agent, and it cannot be used to upset the contract of sale which had become completed before his agency commenced (184). -Effect of.

The effect of a sale of mortgaged property under a power of sale reserved by the deed of mortgage is to destroy the equity of redemption in the land and to constitute the mortgagee exercising the power a trustee of the surplus proceeds, after satisfying his own charge, first for the subsequent incumbrancers, and ultimately for the mortgagor. The estate, if purchased by a stranger, passes into his hands free from all the incumbrances. There seems to be no reason why the second mortgagee, who might certainly have lought the equity of redemption from the mortgagor, should not equally with a stranger, purchase the estate when sold under a power of sale created by the mortgagor (160). -Mort gagor's suit to set aside-Onus on mort gagor in -Inadequacy of price Allegation in plaint merely of-Purchaser's failure to adduce evidence of value of property-Effect.

The plaintiffs were mortgagees or representatives of mortgagors of a certain quarry, and defendants were assignees of the mortgage and purchasers of the quarry, the sale to the latter having been effected by virtue of a power of sale conferred upon the mortgagees by the indenture of mortgage. The suit was for a cancellation of the conveyance to the purchasers, and for a declaration that plaintiffs were entitled to redeem the mortgage. There was no allegation in the statement of claim charging the purchasers with fraud or collusion or bad faith or knowledge of existence of facts which would invalidate the sale. The only ground upon which those claims were based was that the mortgagees (vendors) did not use any exertions to obtain the best price for the land. Though the statement of claim alleged in effect that the sale was very disadvantageous, it gave no hint to the defendants that they would be called upon at the trial to meet the case that the price was so low as in itself to be evidence of fraud.

The trial Court was perfectly satisfied as to the validity of the transaction. The appellate Court, however, held that the sale was fraudulent on the ground of the inadequacy of the price.

Their Lordships reversed the appellate Court and affirmed the sale (263.4).

Under the circumstances their Lordships cannot attach much importance to the circumstance that the defendants | gagee himself purchaser under decree on prior morigage.

Where a power of sale is conferred by a mortgage deed, and the mortgagees ostensibly act within their powers in selling the property, the purchasers are entitled to the full benefit of their purchase, unless it is alleged and proved that they acted in collusion with the vendors, or that the price was so low as in itself to be evidence of fraud or collusion. An allegation that the mortgagees (vendors) did not use any exertions to obtain the best price for the land, and that they sold it to the purchasers at a very inadequate price, is quite consistent with perfect good faith on the part of the purchasers (263). (1911) 13 I.C. 261 = 10 M. L. T. 554.

-Validity-Mortgagee misleading bidders into thinking that sale had been stopped-Purchaser having notice of

The question was whether a sale of mortgaged property held by the mortgagee under a power of sale in an ordinary form contained in the mortgage deed was such as to give a good title to the appellant, the purchaser, as against the mortgagor.

After the bidding reached a certain sum, which was bid by the appeilant, the sale was in fact stopped, and the parties concerned retired to an adjoining place, where they spent about half an hour endeavouring to agree to written terms of settlement. The endeavour failed, and then the auctioneer, by the instructions of the mortgagee's solicitor, purported to resume the sale. The appellant's previous bid was called out several times, and, no competitor appearing. the property was knocked down to him at that price. The evidence showed that, in stopping the sale, the mortgages or their agents so conducted themselves as naturally to lead bidders to suppose that the sale was over at least for that occasion, and to go away from the place of auction. The hidders did go away when the sale was stopped. The evidence also showed that the appellant had notice of all these

Held, that the sale was invalid and did not convey a good title to the appellant as against the mortgagor. (Sir Arthur Wilson.) CHABILDAS LALLOOBHAI v. DAYAL MOWJI.

Upon that execution a sale took place, and at that sale the plaintiff-appellant became the purchaser. On the 23rd of October, 1876, the sale under the execution on the bond in the name of the wife took place; and on that sale the son became the purchaser. The question was between the plaintiff, the purchaser under the first execution though under the second bond, and the son, the purchaser under the second sale, though under the first bond. The plaintiff in substance brought his action to set aside the sale to the son, and to have himself declared the purchaser, he expressly stating in his plaint that he claimed it as purchaser, and to be entitled to redeem. The original grantor of the bonds was no party to the suit, and was not in any way brought before the Court. The plaintiff's contention was that in fact, though there were the three names used, and though it was said that the money was lent by the wife on the first bond, and that the son was the purchaser under the sale, yet in reality the father was the party all through; that it was the father who had lent the money in the name of his wife; and that it was the father who had purchased in the name of the son.

The High Court, concurring with the Court below, found in favour of the plaintiff that the husband or father was merely using the names of the others and that he was the real party all through.

Held that, it being established that the purchase under the second sale was by the husband or father, himself, who had himself caused the first sale to take place and then purchased under the second sale, that second sale could not stand against the purchaser under the first sale and must be set aside (25). The plaintiff-appellant was the purchaser of the suit property in execution of the decree on a second mortgage thereon. The 1st defendant was the purchaser of the same property in execution of the decree on a first mortgage thereon. He was the mortgagee under both the mortgages. The plaintiff's purchase was, however, prior in point of date. The 1st defendant's execution purchase was bename in the name of his son.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was brought by the plaintiff in substance to set aside the sale to the son, and to have himself declared the purchaser; he expressly stating in his plaint that he claimed it as purchaser, and to be entitled to redeem. The mortgagor was no party to the suit, and was not in any way brought before the Court.

The High Court found, concurring with the Court below, that the purchase under the second sale was by the 1st defendant, who had himself caused the first sale to take place and then purchased under the second sale, and held that the second sale could not stand against the purchaser under the first sale, that it must be set aside, and that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. The decree actually drawn up by the High Court added: "And it is declared that the plaintiff, as the second mortgagee in respect of the said property is entitled to redeem the first mortgage of the said defendant" (1st defendant). The decree said further: "And it is further declared that the said plaintiff has not acquired the equity of redemption regarding the said property belonging to the said R" (the original mortgagor).

Held that it was quite unnecessary and irrelevant to say whether it was as a second mortgagee or whether it was as a purchaser that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem, and that the words "as the second mortgagee in respect of the said property" in the decree of the High Court must therefore be struck out (25-6).

It may be that the original grantor of the bond might be induced to make out some case or other that there was rest judicata in his favour on these words (25-6).

Held further that the declaration in the decree of the High Court " that the said plaintiff has not acquired the equity of redemption regarding the said property belonging to the said A" ought also to be struck out (26).

Now that is a question which, if raisable at all, as to which their Lordships express no opinion, can be raised only by R, and has nothing to do with this suit (26).

Their Lordships confirmed the decree of the High Court in other respects (26). (Lord Blackburn). CHOORAMUN SINGH P. SHAIK MAHOMED ALL (1882) 9 I.A. 21 -11 C.L.B. 1 = Bald. 426 = 4 Sar. 329.

It did not also appear that A sought in that suit to displace B's prior title and postpone it to his own. B remained ex parte, and a decree was passed in that suit for the sale of the mortgaged property, in default of payment within the period fixed, subject to A's usufructuary mortgage of 1891. In execution of that decreee the mortgaged property was sold and was purchased by A himself.

In a suit subsequently instituted to enforce B's mortgage of 1892, held that it was not barred under S. 11, Expl. IV of C. P. C. of 1908, by reason of B's omission to make his mortgage deed a ground of defence in the former suit.

Meanwhile a decree had also been obtained on foot of the subsequent mortgage against the 1st respondent. One G became the purchaser at the sale held in November, 1880, in execution of that decree of one-third "the right and interest of the debtor " out of the entire mouzah, J, etc., and of one-third "the right and interest of the debtor" in mouzah R. Being unable to obtain actual possession of the property purchased by him, the appellant instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose, claiming (1) a decree for possession of the share of mouzah f, etc., or, if that was not granted, a decree for the purchase-money paid by him therefor with interest, to be recovered from the said property; and (2) a similar decree in respect of the share of mouzah R. The Courts below decreed possession of the share of mouzah R, but passed only a mortgage decree in respect of mouzih J.

Held, varying the High Court, that the appellant was entitled to a decree for possession of the share of mouzih / purchased by him with mesne profits and costs (136).

Upon the facts of the case, it would be contrary to equity to allow the 1st respondent to set up against the title of the appellant any right to possession as acquired by his purchase from G. The appellant undoubtedly acquired by his purchase a right to possession against the mortgagor, and the mortgagor ought not to be allowed to defeat that by having purchased the interest which was sold in execution of the decree upon the second mortgage (136). -Rights of-Execution of decree on prior mortgage-Fresh suit to enforce rights acquired under S. 74 of Transfer of Property Act-Maintainability-C. P. C. of 1882-S. 244-Effect.

The respondent and A', the first mortgagees of a village, sued upon their mortgage, adding as defendants to the suit, the son of the mortgagor (then deceased), G who, with the respondent, held a second mortgage over the same village, and N, a third mortgage of the village. The decree in that suit ordered that on the defendant paying to the plaintiff or into Court on a specified date the amount due under the decree the plaintiff should deliver up to the defendant all documents in his possession relating to the mortgaged property, and should transfer the property to the defendant free from incumbrances created by the plaintiff, but that, if such payment were not so made, the defendant should be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem.

The son of the mortgagor did not pay the amount within the date fixed, but G did, and the amount paid by him was taken out by the first mortgagees in discharge of their mortgage. Thereupon, G applied for the passing of a decree for foreclosure of the first mortgage in his favour. That application was dismissed on the ground that his remedy was to bring a suit for foreclosure. G thereupon instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose against the respondent, A', the widow of the then deceased son of the mortgagor, and the representatives of N (then deceased) for the reliefs he was entitled to by virtue of his having discharged the decree on the first mortgage.

Held, reversing the High Court, that the suit was not barred under S. 244 of C. P. C. of 1882 (133).

On payment by G, into Court of the amount of the decree on the first mortgage, and acceptance of the same by the first mortgagees, that decree was spent and became discharged and satisfied. There was, therefore, nothing left to be done in the execution department. By the payment, G, no doubt, acquired, under S. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act, all the rights and powers of the first mortgagees as such. But that would not have the effect of reviving or giving vitality to a decree which by the terms of it had become discharged. Even otherwise, the respective rights of G, as owner of the first mortgage and half owner of the -Execution of decree allowed to become barred-Effect -Subsequent mortgagee's suit to enforce his mortgage-Prior mortgagee's right in, to have property sold subject to his mort gage.

A prior mortgagee obtained a decree for sale under S- 89 of the Transfer of Property Act in a suit brought against the mortgagor only without impleading the subsequent mortgagee. He allowed the execution of that decree to become barred by limitation. Long after it became barred, the subsequent mortgagee sued to enforce his mortgage, making the prior mortgagee a party-defendant.

Held, that in that suit the prior mortgagee was not entitled to insist on the mortgaged property being sold subject to his mortgage.

By the decree absolute in the prior suit of the prior mortgagee, there was substituted for his right under his security the right to a sale conferred by the decree. The subsequent mortgagee, not having been made a party, was not affected that decree. Further the decree in the prior suit became inoperative under the Limitation Act as the result of nothing having been done under it. It follows that the title of the subsequent mortgagee has remained in existence as the only encumbrance prior to the title of the prior mortgagee as owner of the equity of redemption (133-4). The decision in Het Ram's case (L. These words are omitted in the rule in O. 34 of C.P.C. of 1908 corresponding to S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. They do not occur in either the foreclosure section of the Act of 1882 or the corresponding rule of O. 34 of C. P. C., which are limited to providing for the extinction of the debt. The words in S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act being gone, the law under the C.P.C. of 1908 remains as it was before the Transfer of Property Act. (Lerd Dunedin.) SUKHI v. GHULAM SAFDAR.

Interest payable by subsequent mortgages in-Rate of-Rate fixed by prior mortgage or reduced rate allowed by decree on prior mortgage.

A puisne mortgagee, who had not been made a party to the suit on the prior mortgage in which the mortgaged property was sold and purchased by the prior mortgagee himself, instituted a suit for redemption against the latter. The plaintiff contended that he was entitled to redeem on payment of the principal and interest at the rate (which was a reduced one) provided in that decree, and not at the rate agreed upon in the mortgage-deed. Held, over-ruling plaintiff's contention, that he was entitled to redeem the prior mortgage only upon payment to the defendant of the principal and interest moneys secured thereby, seeking interest at the rate provided by the said mortgage up to the day on which possession of the mortgaged property was awarded to the defendant in execution and no later (214).

The decree (in the suit on the prior mortgage) can only operate between the parties to the suit, and those who claim under them. But the plaintiff in this case comes to take away from the defendant the benefit of the decree. It would be unjust if he could use the decree to cut down her interest, while he deprives her of the whole advantage of it. His case is, that as to him the defendant is still but a mortgagee, and if so she should be allowed such benefit as her mortgage gives her. If the defendant had not got a decree, and the plaintiff had come to redeem her mortgage, he must have paid whatever interest her contract entitled her to, and the court would have had no jurisdiction to cut it down (213.4). REDEMPTION OF PRIOR MORTGAGE BY-SUIT FOR -(Contd.)

The plaintiff, the assignee of a mortgage, dated 5-9-1886, sued to enforce that mortgage. The defendant was the purchaser of the mortgaged property in execution of a decree obtained on foot of a prior mortgage of the year 1884. There was an yet earlier mortgage on the same pro-perty of the year 1882. In a suit brought to enforce that mortgage (of the year 1882), to which suit the defendant and the plaintiffs' predecessor in interest were parties, the court held that the rate of interest provided by the bond (2 per cent, per month, with annual rests and compound interest) was exorbitant and allowed only simple interest at 12 per cent, per annum. The amount due under the said bond with interest at the reduced rate was paid by the defendant to avert a sale in execution of the decree in that suit; and the defendant thereby succeeded to the rights of the decreeholder in that suit.

The High Court held that as a condition of redemption the plaintiff was bound to pay to the defendant the amount of principal and interest secured by the bond of 1882 according to the terms of that document up to date " while the defendant had " to account for rents and profits in the ordinary way up to date."

Held, reversing the judgment of the High Court, that the defendant was not entitled to a higher rate of interest under the bond of 1882 than that allowed by the decree in the suit brought on foot thereof. (Lord Macnaghten.) KEDAR LAL MARWARI T. DEWAN BISHAN PERSHAD.

-Prior mortgage execution-purchaser, but not mortgagee from him, impleaded in-Payment to prior mortgages purchaser and foreclosure decree absolute obtained against him-Effect of, on mortgagee from him-Failure of prior mortgage purchaser to redeem him-

The swit property and other properties were mortgaged under two simple mortgages, dated 1874 and 1875 to plain-tiff's husband. In 1883, the suit property alone was mortgaged by way of conditional sale in favour of the respondents. In 1880, plaintiff's husband obtained a decree for sale, without impleading the respondents, and purchased the property himself in execution. Plaintiff's husband died in 1895, having bequeathed the property to the plaintiff. She made a gift of, inter alia, the suit property to J and N, who covenanted to pay her Rs. 1,200 a year, and hypothecated the properties gifted to them by way of mortgage

In 1910 the respondents sued upon their mortgage of 1883, impleading J and N only, and not the plaintiff. J and N put forward the mortgages of 1874 and 1875 as a shield. Accordingly the respondents paid into court the sum of Rs. 2,954, the sum due under the said mortgages. J and N withdrew the amount but failed to redeem the respondents and thereupon a decree absolute for foreclosure was made in favour of the respondents in 1913.

In 1914 the plaintiff sued upon her mortgage of 1902 making f and N and the respondents parties.

Held that the plaintiff was entitled to be placed in the position in which she would have been if she had been made a defendant in the respondents' suit of 1910; that the respondents must pay her Rs. 2,954 (which they had paid to /& N) with interest thereon at 6 per cent., and in default, she was entitled to a decree for sale of so much of the estate as would realise that sum; but that, if the said sum was paid

-Purchaser in execution of prior mortgagee's decree prior mortgagee himself-Terms of redemption in case of.

In a suit brought by a subsequent mortgagee for redemption of a prior mortgage, it appeared that the prior mortgagee had himself purchased the mortgaged property in execution of a decree obtained on foot of his mortgage. The question arose on what terms the redemption by the subsequent mortgagee was to be made.

The following rules were laid down :-

(1) Possession by the mortgagee was to be taken as equivalent to interest; so that from the date on which he took possession, he was to be deprived of his interest, and he had not to give an account of his receipts.

(2) The prior mortgagee was entitled to a lien on the property mortgaged to him for the amount of the mortgage debt for which the property was sold, without regard to the amount paid by him on the purchase.

(3) The prior mortgagee was entitled to interest at the rate allowed by the mortgage deed up to the date of the sion of the mortgaged property. The subsequent mortgagee by way of deposit of title-deeds to B in October, 1895. In was not entitled to avail himself of the reduced rate of interest fixed by the decree in the prior mortgagee's suit. (Lord Hobbonse.) UMES CHUNDER SIRCAR v. MUSSU-MAT ZAHOOR FATIMA. (1890) 17 I.A. 201 (2134)= 18 C. 164 (179-81) = 5 Sar. 507.

The suit was by the son of a prior mortgagee, who had obtained a decree on foot of his mortgage, without impleading the paisne mortgagee, and purchased the property at the sale held in execution thereof. The defendant was the puisne mortgagee who was not so impleaded. The question was as to the terms on which the puisne mortgagee was to be allowed to redeem the prior mortgage.

The High Court thought that the decree in the mortgagee's suit allowed only simple interest at the rate provided by the prior mortgage, and not compound interest at that rate as provided by it

Held that the High Court erred in so construing the decree, that the decree allowed compound interest as provided by the bond, and that the plaintiff was entitled to such interest (5-6). (Lord Hobhouse.) GUNGA PERSHAD SAHU P. LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA.

In Show v. Bunny (33 Beav. 494) it was held that a second mortgagee was entitled, equally with a stranger, to purchase for his own benefit the mortgaged estate when sold under a power of sale contained in the first mortgage. The effect of a sale under a power of sale is to destroy the equity of redemption in the land, and to constitute the mortgagee exercising the power a trustee of the surplus proceeds, after satisfying his own charge, first for the subsequent incumbrancers, and ultimately for the mortgagor. The estate, if purchased by a stranger, passes into his hands free from all the incumbrances. There seems to be no reason why the second mortgagee, who might certainly have bought the equity of redemption from the mortgagor, should not, equally with a stranger, purchase the estate when sold not, equally with a stranger, purpose of the mortgagor (160). REVENUE SALE OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY BROUGHT ABOUT BY FRAUD OF REAL PURCHASER OF EQUITY OF REDEMPTION-AVOIDANCE OF.

-Right of-Omission to attack sale in prior mort gage's suit to recover his amount from surplus revenue sale proceeds-Effect.

Property, which was subject to several mortgages, was purchased by the appellant benami in the names of two others. With the object of getting rid of the mortgages, the appellant wilfully allowed the Government revenue to fall into arrears and the property was sold in consequence by the Government nominally as the property of the benamidars, the registered proprietors and was purchased by the appellant himself. After the sale the prior mortgagee instituted a suit upon his mortgage seeking to obtain payment out of the surplus sale proceeds. The respondent was made a party to this suit as a subsequent encumbrancer on the property, but he did not attack the revenue sale. Subsequently the respondent instituted a suit upon his mortgage and claimed relief as against the property itself, ignoring the sale on the ground that it had been brought about by the fraud of the real owner. It was contended that the respondent was, by his conduct in the suit by the prior mortgagee, estopped from attacking the revenue sale, and claiming relief as against the property itself, Held that no such estoppel arose as against the subsequent mortgagee.

The respondent was only made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit as an encumbrancer upon the property. He had no power of controlling the form in which the suit was brought, nor was there any step which he took in the suit irrevocably asserting his intention to rely upon the sale and not impeach the whole proceedings. In a suit for sale by a paisne mortgagee, to which the prior mortgagee was made a party, the courts below decreed a sale of the mortgaged property free from all incumbrances, the net proceeds of the sale to be divided amongst the mortgagees according to their respective priority. On appeal to the Privy Council by the pusse mortgagee, it was contended for him that the decree was wrong in directing a sale of the whole property, and leaving the rights of the parties to be worked out against the purchase-money, and he claimed to treat the suit as a redemption suit.

Their Lordships overruled the objection and affirmed the decrees below, observing:-The plaint asks for a sale, and plaintiff has not till the hearing of this appeal suggested that the court should deal with the property in any other way. On a question of priority between the mortgagees the Court below dealt with the case as if the only question was whether the former registered deed gave notice.

It is true that no estate, title, or interest in the property was originally conveyed by the first deed; but directly the certificate of sale was obtained, according to the English Law, this passed the estate to the first grantee, and, his conveyance being duly registered, the second grant could only operate subject to the first. The plaint in that suit relied upon the later mortgage only and the later mortgage alone was mentioned in the decree and in the execution pro eedings. Similarly C obtained a decree upon his mortgage and executed the same. On a question arising between B and C in proceedings in execution of their respective decrees as to whether B had by taking the later bond and by obtaining a decree upon it lost the right of priority over C's bond which he (B) had under his earlier bond, held, on the construction of the later bond in favour of B, that it did not supersede the earlier hand so as to impair the effect of that bond as a subsisting hypothecation. Held further that by suing upon the later bond. and not upon the earlier one  $\hat{B}$  did not abandon his right of priority under the earlier bond.

B did not need to sue upon the earlier bond in order to obtain a sale for the whole of his debt that being comprised in the later bond. In suing upon the later bond, B did nothing to imply or to lead others to believe that he abandoned what apart from abandonment was a subsisting hypothecation. (Lord Robertson.) SHANKAR SARUP :. Act in indisequent mort gaget's suit.

In a case in which there were a first mortgage of properties A and B to X, a second mortgage of property A, alone to I', a third mortgage of properties A and B, and other properties to X, the sum secured thereby including the principal and interest due under the first mortgage, and a fourth mortgage of property A to V. V sued upon both his mortgages, making X, a party to the suit, admitting that X, was a prior mortgagee of property A, and expressing his readiness to pay X, the amount which might be legally payable to him. X expressed his willingness to have the hypothecated property sold, in the event of his being paid the prior amount due to him.

The decree directed the sale of property A in default of payment on the date fixed and provided that the sale proceeds should be applied first in payment to Y, of the amount due under the second mortgage, that the balance, if any, should be applied in payment of the sum due to X, on that late with interest; and that any surplus left was to be applied in payment of the sum due to F, under the fourth mortgage.

Default was made in payment on the date fixed, a decree absolute for sale of property A was made, and that property was sold. The proceeds of the sale were applied first in payment to Y of the sum then due under the second mortgage, and the balance was paid to X. The balance was insuffiient for the purpose, and the result was that X was not guid the whole of the amount due to him under the first mortgage, and Y was not paid the whole of the amount due to him une'er the fourth. V. therefore, obtained a decree under S. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, and in execution of that decree property II was sold and was purchased by the appellants.

In a suit by X to enforce the third mortgage the appellants contended that property B was relieved of all liablity in respect of the debt due under the first mortgage by reason of the failure of X, to insist upon his priority under that mortgage in V's suit.

Held, overruling the contention, that the fact that the prior mortgagees did not insist on having the amount due under the mortgage of 8-8-1887, satisfied in priority to the claim of the second mortgagees did not disentitle the plaintiffs to recover the full amount of their claim in the present Subsequent purchaser—Priority against—Represent John Edge.) There is nothing in law to prevent the parties to a mortgage from coming to any arrangement afterwards qualifying the right to redeem.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage of 1846, it appeared that, in 1870, the mortgagors had, in consideration of certain additional benefit reserved to them under a compromise, agreed to subject their right of redemption to certain conditions.

Held, that the arrangement arrived at in 1870 was a bar to the action in the absence of an allegation that it was brought upon a breach of the covenant contained in the deed of compromise. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) SHANKAR DIN v. GOKAL PRASAD. (1912) 34 A. 620 =

----Interest in mortgaged property on redemption-Pro-

The terms of S.60 of the Transfer of Property Act are an indication that the rules of English Law relating to a mort-gagor's right to redeem are applicable to Indian society and circumstances.

A mortgage bond, under which the mortgages were entitled to possession for nineteen years, provided that if, at the end of that period, the mortgagor paid off the mortgagemoney, the property was to belong as to a limited interest therein only, to the mortgagor, and as to the major interest therein to the mortgagees; and that, if the mortgagor failed to pay off the mortgage-money at the end of the nineteen years, the property was to belong to the mortgagees absorbed.

Held that, according to the rules of English Law applicable to the case the provisions of the mortgage-deed conferring on the mortgagees on redemption an interest in the property, constituted a clog or fetter upon the equity of the redemption. The purchaser of the equity of redemption in one of the items mortgaged with possession sued the mortgagee for redemption of the item purchased by him on payment of the proportionate part of the mortgage debt. Other items of the mortgaged property had been previously purchased by third parties and the mortgagee had himself purchased the residue of the estate. The mortgagee resisted the suit for reclemption, and the court dismissed it, principally, if not wholly, on the ground, that the purchasers of the other item should have been made parties to the suit, and that the plaintiff should at least have offered to redeem those items by paying their proportionate part of the mortgage debt attributable to them. The said plaintiff thereupon instituted the soit out of which the appeal arose, framing it in the manner indicated by the decree dismissing his prior suit, The purchasers of the items other than those purchased by the mortgagee or the plaintiff, were made parties; and the plaintiff, having paid into court a sum which he alleged to be sufficient to cover the proportion of the mortgage debt attributable to those items, as well as to his own item, claimed absolutely to redeem the latter, and to recover possession of that and the other items, with mesne profits, from the date of the institution of the suit. The Courts below decreed the suit.

On appeal, the mortgagee complained that the plaintiff had been allowed to redeem as against him the items other than his own, i.e., to put himself in his shoes as mortgagee in respect of those items.

Held, that the objection did not come with a good grace from the appellant, who defeated the plaintiff's former suit on the ground that he had not offered to redeem the items in question, and who in the subsequent suit itself included in his calculation of the amount which, as he alleged, ought to have been brought into court the shares of the mortgage debt which he said were chargeable on those items (415), (Sir James W. The original appellant was, in April 1846, the mortgages of an estate comprising 16 different mouzals. That estate had been originally mortgaged with possession by its then owner to one B, who transferred his interest as mortgages to the appellant. In April, 1846, the estate was sold, subject to the mortgage, under process of execution, in satisfaction of decrees against the original mortgagor or his representatives. It was sold in different parcels. One mouzal II was purchased by the plaintiffs-respondents. Two other mouzahs and a portion of the third were purchased each by a different person; and the residue of the estate was purchased by the appellant. The result of the sale was, consequently, that whilst he retained the rights of mortgages over the whole property, he became the owner of the equity of redemption in a portion thereof.

In 1862 the plaintiffs, as the owners of the equity of redemption in mouzah H, brought a suit against the appellant for the redemption of their mouzah on payment of a sum, which they alleged to be the rateable share of the mortgage debt payable by them. That suit was eventually dismissed principally, if not wholly, on the ground that the purchasers of the other three parcels of land should have been made parties, and that the plaintiffs should at least have offered to redeem those parcels, by paying their proportionate part of the mortgage debt attributable to them.

The plaintiffs thereafter instituted the sait out of which the appeal arose, framing the suit in the manner indicated by the decree dismissing their previous suit. The purchasers of the parcels other than those purchased by the appellant or the plaintiffs were made parties on the record; and the plaintiffs, having paid into Court a sum which they alleged to be sufficient to cover the portion of the mortgage delat attributable to those parcels, as well as to their own village, claimed absolutely to redeem the latter, and to recover possession of that and the three other parcels, with mesne profits, from the date of the institution of the suit. The suit was decreed in the Courts below.

On appeal to their Lordships the appellant did not contest the proposition of the plaintiffs that, as purchasers of the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged promises, they were entitled to redeem that portion on payment of the proportionate part of the mortgage debt attributable to it (407-8). The plaintiff instituted a suit for redemption, making the purchasers of the items other than those purchased by the mortgagee or the plaintiff, parties to the suit. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem the items other than his own, or to acquire the interest of the mortgagee in them against his will (415-6).

The mortgagee, if desirons of retaining possession of those items as mortgagee, was entitled to do so against the plaintiff, whose right in that case is limited to the redemption and recovery of his item, upon payment of so much of the sum deposited in Court as represents the portion of the mortgage debt chargeable on that item (416) (Sir James W. -Leve in India and England as to.

By English law, transferees of part of the mortgage security would on the one hand be entitled to redeem the entire mortgage on the properties generally, and correla-tively could not compel the mortgagee to allow them to redeem their part by itself. This would be so as the reselt of principle unless something had happened which extinguished the mortgage in whole or in part, such as an exercise of a power of sale originally conferred on the mortgagee by his security, or such conduct on the part of the transferees as would estop them from asserting what normally would have been their right (211-2). The Judge in the original Court thought that the decisions of the Courts in India had established that one of several mortgagors cannot redeem more than his share unless the owners of the other shares consent or do not object. Subject to proper safeguarding of the rights to redeem, which those owners may possess, this is not so in India any more than in England. The concluding part of S, 60 of the Transfer of Property Act does no more than declare applicable what is just the law as established in England. (Viscount Haldane.) MIRZA YADALLI BEG P. TUKARAM.

Under a mortgage of September 1879 and a subsequent agreement, S became the mortgagee in possession, for a term of 12 years, of a four-annas share of A and an eightannas share of B in two villages. In December, 1888, K mortgaged his four-annas share for 30 years to the plaintiff, who redeemed the mortgage of 1879 and took possession of both shares. In 1897, B mortgaged his eight-annas share to the defendant, who then sued the plaintiff for redemption of that share on the payment of the amount due on it under the mortgage of 1879. The plaintiff insisted on the defendant redeeming the whole share of 12 annas, and the defendant's suit was dismissed. In 1899, the defendant brought another suit for redemption of both shares, obtained a decree and took possession. In 1901, plaintiff sued for redemption of the four annas share of A' only, on payment of the amount due on it under the mortgage of 1879 but offered to redeem the share of B also. EXPIRY OF-ONUS OF PROOF OF-SHIFTING OF.

Oudh Limitation of Suits Act XIII of 1866, St. 6 and 3-Oudh Estates Act of 1869. S. 6 (b)-Presumption of law as to onus under.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage of the year 1840 the question was whether or not the term for redemption had expired in 1853. The mortgage deed itself had been lost and was not forthcoming.

The Court below held that, under Ss. 2 and 3 of the Oudh Limitation of Suits Act XIII of 1866, and S. 6(8) of the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, applicable to the case, there was a presumption of law in favour of the plaintiff, and that the burden of proof lay, not upon the plaintiff to prove that the term did not expire before 13-2-1856, but upon the defendant to prove that it did.

Held, that there was no such presumption of law, that it was for the plaintiff to prove his case by some prima facie evidence at least, but that, when the quantum of evidence required from either party was considered, regard must be had to the fact that the defendant would naturally have the mortgage, and that it would be prima facir, at all events, more in his power to give accurate evidence of its contents than in that of the plaintiff (88).

Held further, that the plaintiff did give prima facie evidence calling for an answer from the defendant, but that the evidence of the defendant contained no answer to the case of the plaintiff (91). (Sir Robert P Collier.) RAJAH KISHEN DUIT RAM PANDAY 2. NARENDAR BAHADUR SINGH. (1876) 3 I A 85=

-Document between parties of subsequent date speaking of mortgage as substitting.

In a suit brought to redeem a mortgage dated in 1851, the defendants maintained that the mortgage was subject to a condition that it should be redeemable only within one year. The Courts below found that the term stated on the part of the defendants was not a term of the mortgage. A document had been put in dated 18-5-1869, which was a bond given by the plaintiffs to the defendants, in which at that date the mortgage was spoken of as then existing and as redeemable.

Held, that that document at all events would be sufficient to support the finding of the Courts below upon that question of fact (16). SETH SEETARAM #. ARJOON SINGH.

-Mortgager's right of.

In cases of mortgages for a term, ordinarily and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period. The question was whether an agreement executed among partners fell within S. 17, cl. (b) of the Registration Act of 1877, and, being unregistered, was inadmissible in evidence, or whether it fell within S. 17, Sub-S. (A) of that Act, and was excepted from registration.

The agreement recited that immoveable property of the partnership was mortgaged to a third party, and declared by one of its clauses that the right of redemption of the mortgage vested in the three partners should during a future period of limited duration be the right of the appellant, one of the partners, and be exercisable by him for his sole benefit.

Held, that the agreement fell within S. 17 (b) of the Registration Act, and ought to have been registered.

By the clause in question there is a complete assurance of a right of redemption for and during a future period of limited duration. The clause declares that what, but for this stipulation, would have been the right of the three partners shall, during that period, be the right of one of the three, exercisable by him for his sole benefit. --- Mortgage's liability for-Conditions.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the appellant (mortgagee) was properly condemned in the costs of the suit (for redemption), and ought not, any variation in the decree notwithstanding, to be relieved from them. His defence in the former suit for redemption, which is inconsistent with his present contention, defeated that suit, rendeted the present suit necessary, and invited the claim on the part of the plaintiffs (purchasers of the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged properties) which he now resists. In this suit he ought at the earliest stage to have submitted to the redemption of H (the village purchased by plaintiffs) alone on payment of that portion of the sum deposited which represented the debt due in respect of that village. Instead of doing so, he raised issues touching the sufficiency of the deposit, which have been determined against him. It is the course of practice in India that the costs of this kind of suit follow the result of the finding on such an issue, and are not, as in an English redemption suit, added to the mortgage debt. Their Lord ships are of opinion that this rule has, in the present case. been most properly applied to a mortgagee who has so long, and by so many expedients, inequitably and vexatiously resisted the right of redemption. In a suit for reslemption in which the first Court made its decree on 29.7-1902 fixing the amount at which the plaintiffs might have redemption with interest added at a certain rate from that date to the date when payment might be made into Court within six months from the said date, it was found that the action of the defendants was oppressive and obstructive, and that they had by their conduct unduly and intentionally prolonged the litigation up to 1912 to the advantage of the defendants and to the serious detriment of the plaintiffs. In directing an account to be taken of the rents and profits which the defendants had received since 29-7-1902, their Lordships, therefore, ordered that the expenses of taking such account and all procedure incident thereto and to the striking of the balance upon payment of which redemption might be made, were to be borne by the defendants.

Their Loriships further ordered that, in the taking of such account, allowance might be made for money, if any, necessarily spent by the defendants after 29-7-1902 in the proper management and preservation of the mortgaged property but no interest should be allowed on the money so spent, but that simple interest was to be allowed to the plaintiffs on the balance or excess of each year's receipts over expenditure, that interest to be at such rate as the High Court might fix. brought against mortgagees. But the present suit affords several substantial grounds for a departure from that rule. The suit was brought, not simply for possession, on an allegation of satisfaction, from the usufruct, but to establish the true relation between the mortgagors and mortgagees, the true nature of the case, the disguised usury, and the disputed unity in one mortgage title of three several instruments. So far it was successful, and it, therefore, cannot be ascribed to a litigious, vexatious spirit; it has established points most important to the future true adjustment of the mortgage accounts, and cannot be said to have been unproductive of future benefit to all concerned (199).

The appeal of the Judge of the zillah Court simply dismisses the plaintiff's suit, which, in some important parts of it, had succeeded. That judgment, therefore, cannot be restored without alteration. Errors have been committed in this suit, in a nearly equal degree, by both litigants. Their Lordships think that the decree of the Sudder Court should be reversed, except so far as it reverses the decision of the Court below, and that each party should pay their own costs of the appeal to the Sudder Court, hereby partly reversed; and that any costs of such last appeal as may have been decreed and paid, and which are inconsistent with such Order of Her Majesty, should be refunded, or otherwise dealt with as justice may require (200-1). --- Amount deposited into Court pursuant to-Forfeiture to Government of by lapse of time-Rights of parties on.

A usufructuary mortgage contained a provision for payment on redemption of a sum in respect of interest. In a suit for redemption of the mortgage, the mode of calculating interest was a matter in controversy, and in regard to that matter the Judicial Committee, in an appeal in the redemption proceedings, differed from the Courts below. Pending the appeal to His Majesty in Council, the mortgagors had deposited in Court to the mortgagee's credit in the case a certain sum of money which was forfeited to Government by lapse of time. On a question arising in proceedings in execution of the decree for redemption as to whether the mortgagee was bound to give credit to the mortgagors for that amount, held that, the mortgagee ought to have taken the amount out of Court without prejudice to their pending appeal to the Privy Council either by arrangement or with the sanction of the Court in India or the sanction of the Judicial Committee, which would have been given as a matter of course, and that he was bound to give credit for it to the mortgagors notwithstanding that it had been forfeited to Government. In a suit for redemption brought on the footing that a decree of the year 1825 made in a suit instituted by the mortgagee on foot of a mortgage of the year 1806, was in the nature of a fresh mortgage, and regulated the rights of the parties from that time, their Lordships held, concurring with the Courts below, that the only right of the mortgagors was to execute the decree of 1825, and that a fresh suit for redemption was barred under S. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 (corresponding to S. 47 of C. P. C. of 1908). It was then contended for the mortgagors that they could fall back upon the right to redeem the mortgage of 1806. In the plaint they did not seek to redeem the mortgage of 1806, or allege, that there had been an acknowledgment of that mortgage, with the result that there had been no inquiry by the Courts below into the question whether there had been such an acknowledgment. The plaintiffs treated the decree of 1825 as the mortgage which they sought to redeem.

Held that, to allow the plaintiffs to fall back upon the mortgage of 1806 would be to permit them to make a different case from that which they had made in the plaint and in the lower Courts, and on which the case had been tried and decided, and that they could not therefore be allowed to do so (69-70). ENFORCE MORTGAGE.

-Decree in-Possession given to mortgagee in execution of-Effect.

By a bond dated 10-2-1857 G mortgaged a certain village to the appellants and their father as security for a loan. In a suit on the band the mortgagees obtained a decree dated 3-11-1860 as follows: - " As the defendant acknowledges the plaintiff's claim, it is ordered that a decree be given to the plaintiffs for principal and interest and costs against the defendant and the mortgaged property". In proceedings in the Civil Court taken under that decree, the mortgagees asked for possession of the village, and obtained, on 17-7-1862, an order in pursuance of which they were put in possession. G took various steps to recover possession of the mortgaged property, or a declaration of his proprietary interest therein, but without success. An application for a grant of the proprietary right in the village, and an appeal from an order cancelling his patta were rejected by the revenue authorities on 8-12-1864, and 27-7-1865 respectively. On 12.8-1867 G sold the village to the respondent, who instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose to redeem the mortgage and obtain possession of the property. The appellants raised a plea in the nature of a plea of ret judicata, being in effect that, in the course of the miscellaneous proceedings had in execution of the decree of 3-11-1860, there had been such an adjudication upon the rights of the parties, that under S. 2 of C. P. C. of 1859 the suit by the respondent was not cognisable by the court.

Held that the present cause of action, tviz., the right to redeem, was not heard and determined in the course of the proceedings in question; and, consequently, that whatever might be the effect of the latter, they did not constitute a bar to the hearing of the present suit within the meaning of S. 2 of C. P. C. of 1859. GOKULDOSS v. KRIPARAM. (1873) 13 B. L. R. 205 = 3 Sar. 279.

Decree in, allowing redemption-Execution of, allowed to become barred-Effect.

In 1823 a suit was instituted to enforce a mortgage of 1806 against the heirs of the two mortgagors. That suit resulted in a decree of 1825 to the effect that an account having been taken of what was due on the mortgage, the mortgagors might at any time make a tender of the amount due, with the interest up to that time, and require that the land should be restored to them. In 1837 an application was made for the execution of that decree, and it resulted in the son and heir of one of the mortgagors paying his share of the money due upon the mortgage, whereupon, so far as regards the one-half of the land mortgaged in 1806 that belonged to that mortgagor the mortgage became redeemed.

In a suit instituted in September, 1877, by the representative in interest of the original mortgagors for redemption of the half of the mortgaged property belonging to the other mortgagor, treating the decree of 1825 as in the nature of a fresh mortgage, and as regulating the rights of the parties from that time, held that the only right which the mortgagors had was to execute the decree of 1825, and not a right to sue as for the redemption of a mortgage, and that the suit as framed was barred under S. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 (60). Decree in not in accordance with Transfer of Property Act—Sale in execution of, and purchase by mortgages himself.

A decree for sale passed in a suit instituted against a Hindu and his two minor sons on a mortgage bond executed by the father was not in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. In execution of the decree the mortgaged property was attached and sold, and was purchased by the mortgagee himself. The sale was confirmed, and a certificate issued.

Held that a fresh suit for redemption of the mortgage by one of the sons of the mortgagor was not maintainable, on the ground that the decree in the prior suit did not comply with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, and did not bar the right of the defendants therein to redeem (59-60).

Whether or not the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act were complied with, the property and all right, title, and interest of those defendants in it were in fact sold to the mortgagee in execution of a decree of a court which had jurisdiction to entertain the suit in which the decree was made, and that decree was not appealed (59-60). MAINTAINABILITY—MORTGAGOR'S PRIOR SUIT FOR POSSESSION AS PROPRIETOR.

Dismissal of - Effect.

Plaintiff sued to recover certain land from the defendant (talukdar), claiming to be entitled to the same as underproprietor. That suit was dismissed on the merits. Plaintiff again sued to recover the same property as proprietor, on payment to the defendant of the arrears of revenue paid by him to Government, the plaintiff treating the same as having been paid on his account. That suit was also dismissed on the ground that a conditional sale by the plaintiff to the defendant in February 1853 had become absolute about the end of 1853. On a third suit brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of the same property on the basis of a mortgage made to the defendant in June, 1854, alleging that the mortgage debt had been satisfied, and offering to pay the balance, if any, due, held that the suit was not barred under S. 13 of C. P. C. of 1877 or under S. 2 of C. P. C. of 1859 (111-2).

The question in issue in the second suit was whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover the property which had been transferred by the Government to the defendant on repaying to him the arrears of revenue which he had paid to Government. The matter in issue in this suit (third suit) is the plaintiff's right to redemption under a mortgage. The plaintiff's present claim does not arise out of the cause of action which was the foundation of the former suit (111-2).

MAINTÁINABIUTY—REDEMPTION DECREE PRIOR.

- Execution of, rendered impossible by vis major.

A mortgagor obtained a decree for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage and, pending an appeal by the mortgagee as to interest, paid into Court the sum directed to be paid under the decree. Before the appeal could be disposed of and the decree executed, however, the Indian Motiny broke out, the records of the court were destroyed, and the Government Treasury was plundered. The mortgagee being in possession did not on the restoration of order proceed with his appeal but obtained a settlement of the mortgaged properties in his name and a sanad was issued to him. The Government declined all responsibility for the amount paid by the mortgagor into the Government Treasury and refused either to return the deposit or to be accountable for it to the mortgagee; and the mortgagee decline 1 to deliver possession of the mortgaged property unless and until he was paid his mortgage amount. Accordingly one of the heirs of the mortgagor instituted a fresh suit for redemption of the mortgage.

Held, reversing the court below, that the suit was sutainable and was not barred under S. 244 of C. P. C. of 1882 (242).

There was nothing which the court could execute. They could not order the mortgagor to pay over again in a proceeding for execution of the existing decree, and they could not order the mortgagee to retransfer the estate without receiving the amount due to him. A new decree, which could only be regalarly made in a fresh suit, was in the circumstances therefore required in order to give effect to the rights of the parties and do justice between them (242-3). #### PARTIES TO.

Purchaser of equity of redemption—Suit by Mortgager if and when a necessary party to.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage by the purchaser of property subject thereto, the mortgagee contended that the plaintiff was under a duty to make the heirs of the mortgagor parties, the mortgagor having died previously. Held, that he was under no such duty (373).

The plaintiff sought to redeem; he had to make out his title to redeem, and he gave prima facie evidence. It was for the defendant to rebut it, and call in answer evidence, if there was any, in rebuttal. Moreover, the defendant had dispensed the plaintiff from any necessity, if there ever had been any, to make the mortgagor's heirs parties, because the defendant himself pleaded that all their rights had been transferred to him (373.4). A plaintiff who alleges that his ancestor, forty-four years ago, made a mortgage to the ancestor of the present possesssor of a property, and by virtue thereof seeks to dispossess the present possessor, must prove his case clearly and indefeasibly. He must succeed by the strength of his own title, and not by reason of the weakness of his opponent's. It would be contrary to all principles of law and justice, that upon such an allegation, a plaintiff should be able to require the present possessor to prove his title, and if he failed in doing so to dispossess him of the land in question. the plaintiffs' mortgage on the ground that he was interested in the equity of redemption; but he set up a paramount title and did not offer to redeem, and was consequently dismissed from the suit. As defendant, however, managed to remain in possession of the suit property, plaintiff brought a fresh suit against him for recovery of possession of the same.

In that suit the High Court, being of opinion that the defendant ought to be allowed to redeem plaintiff's mortgage, decreed redemption on payment by the defendant of the amount for which plaintiff purchased the suit property in execution of his decree together with interest thereon at 6 per cent, from the date of his purchase. The decree further directed that in default of such redemption within six months the plaintiff was to be entitled to khar posses-

Held, that, even if the defendant had a right of redemption, the decree as framed by the High Court was founded on entirely wrong grounds and ought to be reversed

The High Court do not direct any account at all; not even the ordinary account on which a redemption decree must be founded. They go as once to say of their own discretion what shall be the price paid for this mortgaged property. According to the decree of the High Court, a sale having taken place with the knowledge of the defendant under the decree which gave him his costs and dismissed him as one having no interest subordinate to the mortgage, and the plaintiff having paid Rs. 1,600 for the equity of redemption at that sale, he is to have the whole property taken away from him by the defendant on receipt of what he has paid for the equity of redemption alone, and not to have a single farthing for that proportion of his mortgage debt which the court themselves say ought to be charged upon the property. Nor is he to have anything for the defendant's costs which he paid, or for his own costs of that suit which failed by the defendant setting up a fictitious title. The hardship of such a decree upon the plaintiff is apparent in stating the facts. Their Lordships think that it is founded upon entirely wrong grounds. It is not consistent with itself, because it does not give to the mort-gagee what the Court says he is entitled to have, but besides the inconsistency it is founded upon wrong grounds (181-2). ### Mortgage by Conditional sale or.

By a bond dated 10th February, 1857 a village was mortgaged by one G to the appellants and their father as security for a loan; the bond providing that, "If I fail to pay the money as stipulated, I and my heirs shall without objection cause the settlement of the said village to be made with you. The nature of the property was somewhat peculiar. On the face of the mortgage, the mortgagor. G, was described as ma'gwaar of the village, and it appeared that, previous to and at the date of the instrument, the interest of a malgacar was not exactly that of proprietor. Five days, however, after the execution of the mortgage, the law having been modified, G was declared, by the Revenue Authorities, to have the proprietary interest, capable of being disposed of either by mortgage or sale.

It was contended that, on the true construction of the instrument of mortgage, it was a bai-bil-wafa, or deed of conditional sale.

Held, over-ruling the contention, that the effect of the document was to create a simple mortgage hypothecating the right of the party in the village, and that the deed was not meant to operate by way of conditional sale.

The word "sale" is never used throughout the instrument-The security is described in terms as a mortgage of the village, and the only passage from which any inference that it was in the nature of a deed of conditional sale can be drawn is the final sentence quoted above, "that if I fail to pay etc." Now, upon that it is to be observed that when the deed was executed the consent of the Revenue Officers would have been required in order to carry out such a sipulation; that the proprietary right of the mortgagor had not then been declared in the terms in which it was after wards declared; and that, supposing it had been so declar ed, the instrument would not, like an ordinary deed of conditional sale, have imported in terms a sale of the interest of the party which was to become absolute and conclusive upon his failure to pay the stipulated sum at a certain date. Such a contract would, independently of any rule of law to the contrary, execute itself, and the remedy of the party upon it would, if he were out of possession, be a suit for possession. -Decree for mortgage money-Possession obtained by mortgagee in execution of-Effect of, on mortgagor's right of redemption.

By a bond dated 10th February, 1857, G mortgaged a certain village to the appellants and their father as security for a loan. The bond provided that, " if a fail to pay the money as stipulated, I and my heirs shall without objection cause the settlement of the said village to be made with

The mortgagees brought a suit for the recovery of the mortgage debt, and obtained a decree for the satisfaction of the amount decreed either by the defendant himself or out of the mortgaged property. The decree, however, was not executed in that way. After two years' delay, the mortgagees applied for execution of their decree, but in a different way. After stating that the money had not been paid according to the decree, they said the enforcement of the condition of the bond was then just, and therefore they prayed that the full possession of the village might be given to them in perpetuity, and the defendant be released from liability under the decree. And the mortgagees were put in possession accordingly.

It was contended that the substantial effect of the proceedings, taken in execution of the decree, was to destroy any right of redemption which might previously have Held, that the decree did not warrant such a permanent transfer of the village to the mortgagees as would extinguish the right of redemption of the mortgagors; and that the Courts, in executing the decree, did not, and could not, effectually make such a transfer.

If the security was in the nature of a simple mortgage, the proper course for the mortgagees to pursue was to raise the amount for which they had obtained a decree by the sale of the village, paying the surplus proceeds, if any, to the mortgagor. They could not make such a decree the foundation of a transfer which should destroy the right of re-lemp-tion, supposing the right of redemption existed. GOKUL-(1873) 13 B. L. R. 205 -DOSS v. A simple mortgage bond of the year 1870, after stipulating for the payment of the mortgage-debt by instalments, provided that in case of default, "you should recover the same by means of the mortgaged property and from our person according to your wish." The mortgagee brought a suit on the bond for payment of the debt and for realisation of it from the property. The court gave him a decree in the following terms:—' In accordance with the custom prevailing in the courts in this Presidency three months' time will be allowed to the defendants within which to pay up the whole sum now decreed, principal, interest and costs, failing which the plaintiff shall be put in possession of the immoveable and moveable property specified in the bond sued upon and in the plaint and schedule as provided in the terms of the bond." The mortgagee executed this decree and got into possession in 1880. In a suit by the mortgagor to redeem the property as on a subsisting mortgage and for accounts to be taken since 1880, held, affirming the decree of the High Court, that under the former decree the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee was not put an end to and that the mortgagee must submit to be redeemed.

The suit was brought by the respondents to redeem talooka R, which they alleged had been mortgaged to one O for Rs. 3,067, and after his death had got into the possession of A, in consequence of a sub-mortgage from the widow of O. The defendant-appellant was the son of A, and his case appeared to be that A was in possession from a period prior to the settlement in 1858; that in that year he was admitted as talookdar to the talook, and he claimed to hold it free of any claim on the part of the original mortgagors.

The original mortgage was beyond dispute, and there was evidence that A held under a sub-mortgage. The defendant did not rely upon mere possession and say that he got in as a trespasser, and was entitled to hold the talook by virtue of possession and protected by the statute of Limitations; but he set up an affirmative title that the chuckladar leased it to him, and he entirely failed to prove that title. He asserted, but did not prove it.

Held, that, under the circumstances, it could not be said that the Courts below, who found the facts, were wrong in coming to the conclusion that the defendant did hold the talook, by some title derived from the original mortgagee (197). ### MORTGAGE-SUBROGATION.

-Claim to, on ground of payment of mortgage amount -Proof necessary in case of.

The appellant shaped his case as equitable mortgagee from certain persons, alleging that he had paid off, at their request, the mortgage due on their property, and therefore claimed to stand in the position of the original mortgagee, as if a regular transfer of the mortgage had been made to him. There was sufficient proof of his being the hand that had paid off the money under the original mortgage. But there was no proof that it was his own money, or that he was to stand in the situation of the original mortgagee. There was also no proof of any equitable assignment having been made to him.

Held, that the appellant was not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee. (Lord Brougham.) PANDOORUNG BULLAL PUNDIT P. BALKRISHEN HUR-(1838) 2 M.I.A. 60= BA-JEE MAHAJUN.

The assignce of a mortgage executed by the manager of a joint Hindu family instituted a suit thereupon against the other members of the family and his assignor. One of the terms of the deed of assignment was that if the amount which the plaintiff recovered from the other members of the family fell below a certain figure he was to get the balance from his assignor. The High Coart held that the rate of interest provided by the bond was exorbitant and passed a decree for an amount less than the stipulated figure against the other members of the family. Grant of Propriety-Mortgage bond sued on not itself supported by consideration.

The plaintiff and the defendant, A, agreed that, in consideration of the plaintiff defraying one-third of the expenses of the litigation between R and A', the defendant, R, should grant a lease to the plaintiff's brother of an eight annas share in a certain mouza, and should, when that litigation was concluded, execute a sale deed of that share to the plaintiff. Under that agreement the plaintiff paid certain sums. Subsequently to that agreement and before the termination of that litigation, the defendant gave to the plaintiff two hypothecation bonds to be used should the defendant, R, refuse to execute the sale-deed.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff to enforce the two bends, it was found that no consideration passed for the same, and that the defendant. R. had always been ready to carry out the agreement on his part. Held, that the bonds in respect of which there was no consideration ought not to be made securities for the amounts advanced by the plaintiff for the litigation between R and K. (Sir John Edge.) In pursuance of a decree for a debt then due under a mortgage, the mortgagee-decreeholder attached four villages of the mortgagor. For fresh instalments and fresh arrears of interest accrued due under the same mortgage. the mortgagee subsequently obtained another decree, and applied for a sale of the same four villages without any previous attachment. It appeared that the four villages were still under attachment in execution of the first decree. The Court made an order for sale without a fresh attachment. On objection taken to the validity of the order for sale on the ground that there was no attachment prior to the said order. held that there was no substance in the objection (26).

The four villages were under attachment at the suit of the same creditor, and to enforce a portion of the same debt, which had accrued at an earlier period under the same instruments of mortgage. A second order for attach ment would be an empty formality, and there is no rule which requires it (26). (Lord Hobbouse.) DOSIBAL P. ISHWARDAS JAGJIVANDAS.

On an application made for the execution of a decree for sale, appellant, the representative of the defendant, who had died previously, presented to the Court executing the decree a petition of objections under S. 244 of the C. P. C. of 1882. Some of his objections were allowed, others of his were disallowed on the ground, amongst others, that he had failed to support them by sufficient evidence. In a suit subsequently filed by the appellant raising the same objections to the execution of the decree for sale which had been put forward in his petition of objections and which had been disallowed, hel f that the suit was barred by S. 244 of the C. P. C. of 1882.

Two persons, who were not parties to the previous suit or execution proceedings were impleaded in the subsequent suit without any foundation being laid by reliable legal evidence for impleading them. Held further that the joinder of those persons was merely an attempt to avoid the bar to the separate suit provided by S. 244.

The questions raised in this (subsequent) suit could have been and were raised under S. 244 of C. P. C. of 1882, and, whether then raised or not in appellant's petition of objections, they are questions which relate to matters which by S. 244 it was enacted "shall be determined by orders of the Court executing a decree and not by separate suit." To a suit to enforce a mortgage, B, one of the mortgagors and K, the representative in interest of another mortgagor, were parties. Pending the suit the points in issue therein were referred to the arbitration of a named person. B was a party to the agreement for reference, but K was not. The arbitrator made an award, a decree was passed in accordance with the award, and in execution thereof B's interest in the mortgaged property was sold. It appeared that Bhad previously acquired K's interest in the mortgaged property. On a question arising whether the execution sale of H's interest passed not only his original share in the mortgaged property but also the share purchased by him from K, he'd that B's share included whatever he took by conveyance from K (36). One Kasim purchased a 15 annas 6 gundas share in a certain property in the name of his wife, Aso. Kasim died in 1881, leaving, among other heirs, the said Aso who was entitled to a 1 anna 18 gundas 5 cowries share in his properties, and Karamat, who was entitled to a 5 annas 14 gundas 15 cowries share therein. In 1882 Aso executed a mokurari grant (or grant at a fixed rent) of a 4 annas share of the property in favour of Jaggu, and in 1883, she executed a similar grant of an 8 annas 6 gundas share in favour of Karamat aforesaid. In 1884, Jaggu and Karamat mortgaged their mokurari interests under the above grants in a 12 annas share of the property to the plaintiff. Plaintiff institute la suit on bis mortgage and obtained a judgment holding that he was mortgagee of a mokurari interest in a 12 annas share of the property. In execution of the decree in the said suit a 5 annas 15 gundas mokuran share of the property was sold and was purchased by the plaintiff himself for a sum which more than covered the amount of his mortgage debt. In a suit by him to record possession of the share sold to him, it was contended by persons claiming under the said Karamat that Aso, to whom the property was conveyed on the purchase by Kasim was only a benamidar of Kasim, that the grants of 1882 and 1883 did not therefore vest in Jaggu and Karamat more than a mokurari interest in a 1 anna 18 gundas 5 courses share, being the share to which Aso succeeded on the death of her husband, and that plaintiff could, by his mortgage and execution purchase, acquire no higher right. Held, over ruling the contention, that it by no means concluded the case.

Karamat, who was one of the mortgagors to the plaintiff, was entitled by succession to a proprietary interest in a 5 annas 14 gundas 15 cowries share. The mortgage doubtless recited the grants of 1882 and 1883, and was MORTGAGE—SUIT TO ENFORCE (OR SUIT FOR | MORTGAGE—SUIT TO ENFORCE (OR SUIT FOR SALE ON)-(Contd )

made upon the footing that a mokurari interest in a 12 annas share had been duly created by these grants; and it purported to convey a 12 angas mokurari share. In these circumstances it is not now open to any person claiming under Karamat to dispute that the mortgage effectively conveyed to the plaintiff a mokurari interest in at least the 5 annas 14 gundas 15 cowries share to which Karamat was entitled by succession. Further all the persons claiming title under Karamat were parties to the mortgage suit, and are bound by the decree for sale, and it is therefore not competent to them to dispute the title of a purchaser under that decree. Decree in-Ex parte decree against all defendants. -Selling aside of, as against some-Restrial and second decree against all-Effect-First decree if merged in second.

A suit upon a mortgage executed by the manager of a joint Hindu family was instituted against the mortgagor and his two sons, and was decreed ex parte against them, That do ree was ub equently made absolute against them. On an application by one of the sons, the cx parte decree was set aside as against him, and the soit was retried. At the re-trial the other son was not allowed to appear; but the decree passed on the re-trial was nevertheless a comprehensive decree against all the members of the family, including the son who was not allowed to appear at the re-trial. An application made for an order making the subsequent elecree absolute was opposed by the son who was not allowed to appear at the re-trial, but his objections were disallowed, the High Court holding that there was a merger by the second decree of the first and that the latter was impliedly set aside by the former.

Their Lordships observed that they did not affirm the application in the High Court of the doctrine of merger, either in a general sense or in the sense of a vox signata (175-6). (Lord Shore.) ting the claim of the plaintiff. The petition ran thus :- " It is prayed that the claim may be decreed with costs and interest for the period of pendency of suit, as well as interest from the date of de ree to the day of realization on the entire amount of decree. principal and interest at 1 per cent, per mensem, as per conditions set forth in the bond, the basis of the claim and costs, against the property mortgaged in the bond." The order made thereon was in the following terms :- " That the case be decreed in accordance with the petition of admission of claim."

Held, that there was nothing in the language of the decree of 19-3-1877 which indicated an intention of altering the contract made by the bond, and that the High Court erred in thinking that it gave only simple interest at 12 per cent, from its date on the amount claimed in the plaint of that suit (4).

The terms in the body of the decree of 19-3-1877 are such as to introduce all the conditions of the mortgage. The claim is to be decreed with costs and interest for the period of the pendency of the suit, as well as interest from the date of the decree to the day of realization on the entire amount of the decree, principal and interest at I per cent, per mensem " as per conditions set forth in the bond." Now the condition of treating interest as principal, so as to carry interest if it were not paid by a date mentioned in the bond, is just as much one of the conditions of the bond as any other condition therein (4). DATE FIXED FOR PAYMENT.

-Interest after-Award of-Power of Court. In a soit for sale upon a mortgage it is quite competent for the Court to give interest beyond the day fixed for paymeet into Court of the amount declared necessary to effect redemption and avoid sale.

If S. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act could be looked at as an isolated enactment quite detached from other legal considerations it would be hard to construe it otherwise than as limiting the mortgagee's right to interest up to the date fixed for payment only. But, considering the universality of the long-established practice allowing interest after that date and upto date of payment, its continuance for years after the Transfer Act was passed, the manifest justice of it, the lack of any apparent reason for upsetting it, the conformity with it of S. 97 which is in pari materia with S, 88, the presumption that S, 88 was framed with reference not to the running of interest but to the determination of time for redemption or sale alternatively, and the form of suit sanctioned by the C.P.C., their Lordships have no besitation in dissenting from that view (45). (Lord Habburg) Maharajah of Bhapatpur : Pan Kanno (1900) 28 I. A. 35-23 A. 181 (193)= 5 C.W.N. 137 - 3 Eom. L.R. 51 =7 Sar. 792.

-In this case the High Court held that in a decree for sale uader S. 88 of the Transfer of Property. Act the Court had no power to allow interest for a period beyond the date fixed for payment, which must be within six months from the date of the decree.

Their Lordships reversed the High Court and held that interest might be awarded up to the date of the realisation of the money. (Lord Macnaghten). BALWANT SINGH P. AMOLAK RAM. (1905) 28 A. 223 = 1 M.L.T. 65 = 3 C.L.J. 85 - 16 M L.J. 160.

-Interest after-Award of Power of Court-Rate at solved interest to be allowed.

According to the true construction of S. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act the Court has power to allow interest at the Court rate after the date fixed for payment,

Source of that power.

The words of S. 209 of C.P.C. of 1882 are large enough to include the case of a sum of money payable to the plaintiff out of a fund, and it may be that the Legislature considered that the power of the Court to allow interest after the fixed day was sufficiently provided or preserved by that section, the two Acts being co-temporary. Or it may be said that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act are not exhaustive and were not intended to overrule the established practice of allowing such interest. The directions for payment to the parties contained in S. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be read literally, because S. 94 contemplates a final adjustment and provides for payment of subsequent costs, and there is nothing in the Act which precludes the subsequent interest also being tal en into account. The account was taken by his successor in office, who had not tried the suit, but, in making the final order as to the account, he did not confine himself to making an order for the amount which on taking the account he found to be due as the mortgage debt, but proceeded to award interest from the date of the suit on the amount of the mortglige debt.

Held that, it was not within the scope of his powers to Mortgage fresh or decree merely.

On a mortgage of the year 1806 a suit was brought in 1823 (November) by the mortgagers against the heirs of the mortgagors, and a decree was made in that suit ou 8.9-1825. The decree set out the mortgage of 1806, and the accounts which had been taken, the suit being brought to enforce the mortgage, and ordered the defendants to pay in all Rs. 2,396-4-9 to the plaintiffs-treating the mortgage by the two mortgagors as a joint mortgage, and the whole sum as being due by both mortgagors-by the date fixed, and they were to redeem their Maharki field which they had mortgaged to the plaintiffs. Then the decree said :- "Until the defendants clear off the money the plaintiffs should use and enjoy the field according to (the terms of) the agreement. On the day on which the defendants will pay the money, the plaintiffs should compute the interest on Rs. 2,396.4.0, at the rate of 1 per cent. (per mensem) from the date (that will be) fixed; should deduct therefrom the amount of produce from the fixed date onwards; should receive the remaining amorast, together with the interest, and should restore the field to the defendants". Although the decree spoke about a date which would be fixed, no date was fixed by it, and the operation of the decree appeared to have been that an account having been taken of what was due on the mortgage, the mortgagors might at any time make a tender of the amount due, with the interest up to that time, and require that the hand should be restored to them.

On a question arising as to the real nature of the aforesaid decree, whether it was to be regarded as a decree which had to be executed by the mortgagoes if they wanted to exercise their right of redemption, or whether it was in the nature of a fresh mortgage, and it regulated the rights of the parties from that time, with the result that they could institute a suit for redemption on foot thereof, held that the decree must be regarded as a decree, and not as a mortgage (68-9). If such payment is not made, a decree absolute may be made for sale and for payment of the amount realised into Court. The section then provides that " the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished". The construction which their Lordships put on the language so used is that on the making of the order absolute the security as well as the defendant's right to redeem are both extinguished, and that for the right of the mortgagee under his security there is substituted the right to a sale conferred by the decree (133). -Effect of -T. P. Act. S. 89-Law under-Alteration of by C. P. C. of 1908.

The law prior to the T. P. Act was that the owner of property who was in the rights of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage was entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee, who was not bound by the sale or by the decree on which it proceeded, to set up the first mortgage as a shield.

The decision in Het Ram's Case (L. R. 45 1, A. 130) that a mostgage put in suit was gone for ever as soon as the decree of sale was obtained was based on the express words of S. 89 of the T. P. Act which ends, after providing for the decree, "and thereafter the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extingui-hed." These words are omitted in the Rule in O. 34 of C.P.C. of 1908, corresponding to S. 89 of T. P. Act. They do not occur in either the foreclosure section of the Act of 1882 or the corresponding rule of O. 34 of C. P. C., which are limited to providing for the extinction of the delt. The words in S. 89 of the T. P. Act being gone, the law under the C. P. C. of 1908 remains as it was before the T. P. Act. (Lerd Dunedin.) SUKHI & GHULAN SAFDAR,

The suit property had already been attached by K in execution of a money decree obtained by him against S. On the eighth day of his obtaining the decree, L, therefore, presented a petition for the execution of his decree. In that petition L alleged that, if proceedings for execution of his decree were to be taken after expiry of the four months' time allowed by the Court, the decretal money due to him could not be realised in any way, and he, therefore, prayed that the case might be registered, that proceedings for attachment of the properties of the judgment-debtor might be taken, that sale proclamation might be issued and date for sale of the properties might be fixed by the Court after the time allowed, and that the decretal money due to him might be realised.

On L's petition the Court made an order of attachment of the property in dispute, and the same was accordingly attached. The suit property was sold in execution and purchased by the appellants, who held a money decree against L and who, in execution of that money decree, purchased the mortgage decree held by L against S, and brought the suit property to sale in execution of the mortgage decree.

The High Court held that L had, in ignorance of his rights, ejected to surrender his rights under his mortgage and had proceeded to execute his decree as a money decree.

On appeal, the Privy Council held, that L could not, as held by the High Court, be deemed to have elected to surrender his rights under the mortgage. (Sir John Edge.) SARJU PRASAD MISSIR D. MAKSUDAR CHOWDHRY

Insolvency of mortgagor or his heir pending.

Foreclosure deerce obtained against insolvent without impleading receiver-Suit subsequent by receiver to set aside -Maintainability-Application by receiver to be made party to former suit rejected-Effect.

Pending a suit to enforce a mortgage, the mortgagor died, and his son and heir, an undischarged insolvent, was brought on record as his legal representative, and a preliminary decree was passed against him. When he learnt that, the Receiver, in whom the estate of the son was vested, filed petitions alleging that he was the proper person entitled to represent the estate of the insolvent, and praying that the court should set aside the preliminary decree, make him a party in the suit as receiver, and try the suit in his presence. Taking an erroneous view of the receiver's rights, the Sub-Judge refused to make him a party, heard him on his petitions, repelled his objections to a final decree, and passed a final decree by which the son, the undischarged insolvent. was debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property. The receiver appealed to the High Court against the order of the Sub-Judge, but that appeal was dismissed.

In a suit subsequently brought by the Receiver for setting aside that foreclosure decree and for redemption of the property, held that the foreclosure decree did not constitute res judicata against the receiver under S. 11 of C.P.C.

The foreclosure decree on the face of it bears that it was pronounced in a suit to which the Receiver was not a party, and therefore does not come within the rule as to res indicata in S. 11, which only applies to matters which were in issue in a former suit between the same parties. The refusal to make the Receiver a party to the suit cannot be treated as having the same effect as an order to the opposite effect (194-5). (Lord Salveren.) KALA CHAND BANERJEE D. JAGANNATH MARWARI. The property had been attached during the lifetime of C's wife at the instance of a creditor of hers, and for payment of the decree debt C's nephew executed a mortgage dated 21-1-1895 of the said property in favour of the plaintiff. Subsequently the Raja of Basti, claiming to be the real heir of C, sued for possession of the property, making the plaintiff (the mortgagee), C's nephew, and others defendants to the suit. The plaintiff set up the mortgage in his favour and contended that the Raja of Basti had no right whatever to question its validity. The suit was ultimately decreed in favour of the Raja of Basti, and he recovered possession of the property from the defendants

In a suit subsequently instituted by the plaintiff (the mortgagee) against, inter alia, the Raja of Basti or his representative, the plaintiff contended that the property in the defendant's possession was subject to a charge in his favour and that the defendant, the Raja, was estopped from setting up his right to the property mortgaged to him.

There were several other purchasers of other portions of the mortgaged property who were made parties and who also alleged paramount titles in theuselves, so that the suit would have been multifarious and confused in the highest degree if it had gone on in that shape. The jointles in a suit to enforce a mortgage of persons who set up adverse claims to the mortgaged property is irregular, and only tends to confusion (188).

The confusion arises because the cause of action against the adverse claimant, that is, the right to obtain a declaration of title against his adverse claims, is joined with another which is quite distinct, the enforcement of rights under a mortgage (190). -Prior and subsequent mortgages if necessary—Omission to implead person holding peror and subsequent mort gages-Effect-Suit subsequent by him to enforce those mortgages-Maintainability-C. P. C. of 1908. S. 11-Effect.

Held (1) that a third mortgagee, who had also a right to be subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee was a necessary party to a suit brought to enforce a second mortgage on the same property, under S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act (79, 82); (2) that a decree made in the suit brought by the second mortgagee without impleading such third mortgagee could not affect the rights of the latter both under his own mortgage and under the first mortgage discharged by him, and S. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 did not bar a suit brought by the third mortgagee to enforce his rights both under the third mortgage and under the first mortgage discharged by him (84).

It has been consended that S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to a suit for sale of an equity of redemption and that a puisne mortgagee is not a person "having an interest in the property comprised in a mortgage" of a first or any prior mortgagee who brings a suit for sale on his prior mortgage. GENERAL RELIEF-PRAYER FOR.

-Grant of personal decree in Privy Council appeal under head of-Propriety-Mortgage invalid as such-Personal relief not claimed in plaint or in courts below.

A suit to enforce a mortgage on land, the validity of which was challenged on the ground that it had not been registered in accordance with the Registration Act, and was, therefore, inoperative, was decreed by the Court of First Instance, but was, on appeal, dismissed by the High Court. In neither Court had the plaintiffs made an alternative claim for a personal judgment for the mortgage debt. On appeal to the Privy Council the plaintiffs prayed for such relief for the first time under the head of general relief. Their Lordships, while feeling that they could not themselves deal with the claim in the then state of the records, thought it desirable, in the circumstances of the case, to allow the plaintiffs an opportunity of bringing the matter before the High Court and gave them 6 months' time for the purpose.

If any such application is made, it will be for the High Court to consider whether any such claim is open upon the present pleadings, and, if not, whether any amendment raising it should be made; and further, whether, under all the circumstances, the claim should be entertained at this stage of the proceedings. If the High Court should think it right to enter upon the consideration of this claim, all defences on the merits or arising out of the lapse of time must be open to the defendants, and the High Court should have power to impose any terms which it thinks just and to deal with the costs (134). GRANT OF, AT TIME OF DECREE FOR SALE.

-Validity-Condition.

It is not a condition precedent to the power of decreeing payment of the balance under S. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act that the mortgaged property must first be sold and found insufficient to satisfy the debt. The words of the section are satisfied in cases where the court passes a decree that, on the happening of the event when the net proceeds of the sale are found to be insufficient, the balance should be paid. The order, though made at the time of the decree for the sale of the mortgaged estate, operates at a future date, and is made in such terms that it can only operate when the sale has failed to satisfy the debt, and this is the event specified and defined in the section as the event when the decree can be made, (Lord Buckmatter.) Pending a suit by the plaintiff for the realisation of a mortgage by foreclosure or sale, the mortgaged property was sold in execution of a simple money decree against the mortgagor, and was purchased by one A. The plaintiff, when he learnt of the purchase by A, applied to make him a party to the mortgage suit as a person having an interest in the mortgaged property. On being made a party, K put in a statement by which he claimed a title paramount to the suit mortgage, but did not set up a defence as claiming through the mortgagor. The Court, finding a defence raised which was quite foreign to a mortgage suit, dismissed A' with costs. A decree was passed in the mortgage suit, and, in September, 1880, the mortgaged property was sold in execution and was purchased by the plaintiff himself. A insisted on being present when the order for sale was settled, and on having a voice in its terms, and he actually got them varied to his satisfaction.

K, however, managed to be in possession of the property purchased by the plaintiff, and plaintiff therefore instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose for the recovery of possession of the same from him.

S. 13 of C. P. C. of 1877 has nothing to do with the case. This is not a question whether a person is bound by a de-cree made in some other suit. The question is whether he is bound by the decree made in this very mortgage suit of 1867, in which the plaintiff bought the land, and whether after that decree was passed his rights were not entirely gone (178). Prior binding mortgage on property-Amount paid by plaintiff to discharge-Recovery of-Right of.

M executed a mortgage bond dated 12-5-1872 in favour of the appellant mortgaging property of an asthal of which the respondent was the mobunt. M had no authority to mortgage asthal property, and there were no circumstances which would make the mortgage binding on the property A portion of the amount raised by that mortgage was raised for the purpose of, and was utilized in, paying off a prior mortgage of the same property executed in 1869 in favour That prior mortgage was also executed by M and was binding upon the asthal and its property. A portion of the amount raised by it, Rs. 5,489, was applied in the perchase of four small properties which, in a litigation between M and the respondent, were adjudged to be the property of the asthal, because they were purchased with the mose raised by the mortgage to L. Those four properties were not included in the mortgage to the appellant.

In a suit brought by the appellant to recover upon his mortgage of 1872, he contended that, even though his offi mortgage might be invalid and unenforceable against asthal property, he was in any event entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 5,489, which had been utilised in the purchase of properties which had been adjudged to the asthal.

Held, that the appellant was not entitled to recover the said sum (72-3).

L's mortgage was not kept alive and transferred to the appellant as a security for his loan of 1872. The right of M, if he had any, against the asthal in consequence of the application of the Rs. 5,489 in the purchase of property held Unless M's claim against the asthal was included in the mortgage of 1872, and can be held to have been assigned to the appellant as a security for the loan, there is no privity between the appellant and the respondent in respect of the Rs. 5,489 (73). In April 1895 a Maharaja executed in favour of his pleader a mortgage deed for the principal sum of Rs. 1,30,000. The principal moneys, together with interest, were to be repaid as provided by the deed, by and out of the rents and cesses of certain mokurrari villages of the Maharaja, which were mortgaged with possession to the pleader. A schedule was annexed to the deed showing how the repayment with interest was to be effected, and that on the determination, on the 14th January, 1903, of the period for which the mortgage was granted, it was contemplated that the delt with interest would be satisfied, and a balance of Rs. 230 and odd would be payable to the Maharaja by the pleader. The total period for which the mortgage was granted was from 1895 to 14th January, 1903, and the times when possession of the different mokurrari villages was to be given to the mortgagee were specified. The deed mentioned certain events in which the mortgagor made himself personally liable to repay the mortgage money and provided that except in those events he was not personally liable to repay the mortgage money or any part of it. The parties treated the mortgage as a usufroctuary mortgage, and under it the mortgagee obtained and held possession of the villages mortgaged.

Held that the document did not create a charge within the meaning of S. 100, Transfer of Property Act, but was a usufroctuary mortgage within the meaning of S. 67 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, and, not having been attested by at least two witnesses, as required by S. 59 of that Act, it was not enforceable as a mortgage; and that the deed did not contain a personal liability in debt on the part of the mortgagor, and the mortgagoe could not, even if it could be regarded as an enforceable usufructuary mortgage, by reason of S. 67 (a), institute a suit for sale based upon it. Held that the instrument, though it was called a mortgage, was not a mortgage in any proper sense of the word

It is not a security for the payment of any money, or for the performance of any engagement. No a younts were to be rendered or required. There was no provision for redemption expressed or implied. -Interest or dispensession from part of mortgaged property-Mortgaga's right to-Acquievence in dispusession-Effect.

The material clause of a mortgage deed was as follows :-I do hereby mortgage the following twelve villages to S at Rs. 2 per cent, interest, and promise and put down in writing that until delivery of possession of the aforesaid villages to S, I shall pay interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. on Rs. 5,000, the mortgage money; that, until I pay up the sum of Rs. 5,600 on account of principal, with interest to the very last pie, S shall continue in possession and occupation (of the aforesaid villages), and that I shall put forward no excuse or objection.

Possession of the entire mortgaged property was delivered to the mortgagee on the execution of the mortgage. By an instrument of even date with the mortgage deed, S, the mortgagee, leased to the mortgagor, six of the mortgaged villages at a consolidated rental of Rs. 2.801 per annum, less Rs. 800 per annum allowed to the lessee as naukar."

The mortgage was of the year 1851, and, in a suit brought in 1894 to redeem the mortgage, it appeared that although possession of the twelve villages originally mortgaged was given to the mortgagee at the time of the mortgage, their number was reduced to six in 1853, and to five by 1858 and 1864, but that the mortgagee did not on that account sue for his mortgage-money, but remained satisfied for 31 years up to date of suit with the diminished security and the possession of the remaining villages. The mortgagee made no attempt to enhance the rent of the villages which were left to him, and they constituted an ample security for the whole amount of his claim.

Held (1) that the mortgage was a usufructuary mort-and (2) that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem on payment of the principal only.

In this case the arrangement between the parties was completed by the execution of a lease, under which the mortgagor became the tenant of the mortgagee, and paid rent in lieu of interest. Under such a mortgage, the mortgagee takes his chance of the rents and profits being greater or less than the interest which might have been reserved by the bond, and the mortgagor is entitled to redeem on repayment of the mortgage money. The fact that the mortgagee lost possession of some of the villages mortgaged subsequently does not, in the circumstances, constitute a failure on the part of the mortgagor to secure to the mortgagee possession of the mortgaged property, which entitled the mortgagee to claim interest in lieu of the rents and profits of the property of which he was dispossessed. -Simple mortgagor or -I case part of same transection as mortgage - Rent due under, working out at 6 per cent. for annum on mortgage amount.

A registered mortgage deed expressly stipulated that the profits of the mortgaged property should belong to the mortgagee in lieu of interest. Four days after the date of the said mortgage the mortgagee leased the mortgaged property to the mortgagor. Within ten months the mortgagor gave up possession under his lease and the mortgagee obtained possession under his mortgage. In a suit for redemption brought about 24 years later the mortgagor claimed an account of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property.

The High Court held that the mortgage was usufructuary only in form, and that the security was intended to be simple mortgage carrying interest at 6 per cent. per annum In coming to that conclusion they were influenced by the circumstance that the lease, which was practically contenporaneous with the mortgage and was for the period of the mortgage, was at a rent which worked out at 6 per cent. Per annum on the sum secured.

Held, reversing the High Court, that, though the mortgage and the lease were parts of one and the same transaction, there was no inconsistency between the two instraments, and that the mortgagee was entitled to the rents and profits as provided by the mortgage-deed.

There would not have been any inconsistency if the mortgage itself had contained a provision for granting a lease on the terms upon which the lease was actually granted. (Lord Macnaghten). ABDULLAH KHAN D. BASHARAT HUSAIN. (1912) 40 I. A. 31 = 35 A. 48 (56) = 13 M. L. T. 182=

Deed creating an-Deed merely reciting prior oral mortgage or.

A suit brought by the plaintiffs' ancestors against the predecessors of the defendants for a decree for possession by partition" of a 12-annas share in a certain mauza was dismissed by the first Court. Pending an appeal in the Zillah Court from that dismissal of the suit, the parties came to a compromise, and, on April 1, 1857, filed before the Zillah Judge a petition of compromise, and prayed for a decree in terms of the conditions set forth in that petition. Those conditions" were stated in the body of the petition in the following terms. "Now the parties have come to a settlement in this way, that we, the respondence, admit the ownership of the appellants and that the claim has been brought within time; that the respondents shall remain in possession of the aforesaid property for a period of twelve years in lieu of the mortgage money; that the appellants shall redeem the aforesaid property after twelve years, on payment of the mortgage money out of their own pocket."

In a suit brought by the plaintiffs to redeem the usufructuary mortgage recited in the petition of compromise they relied upon a certified copy of the petition to establish the mortgage. It was objected that the petition of compromise was insufficiently stamped, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue upon it.

Held, that the suit was not based on any agreement contained in the petition, but was based on a contract made outside and recited in it to enable the Court to make a decree in accordance with the settlement, and that according to the law then in force an usufructuary mortgage might be made verbally (267-8). The mortgagor under a usufructuary mortgage pleaded discharge thereof by payment to a third person on behalf of the mortgagee. The mortgagor did not prove ratification of such payment by the mortgagee. It, however, appeared that at about the time of the alleged payment the mortgagee delivered over possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor and that the mortgagee was out of possession therefrom for 20 years.

Held, that under all the circumstances of the case the morigage must be held to have been discharged by the alleged payment as if it had been made to him direct. HABIB-UL-LAH KHAN v. ANROODH SINGH. 8 M. J. 311 = 8 M. J. 311= B & J's No. 22 (Oudh).

Praudulent transaction or not.

Evidence.

Held, on the evidence, that the usufructuary mortgage set up by the plaintiff in a suit under O. 21, R. 63, to set aside an order for attachment before judgment was not a home fide transaction entered into with the object of securing a debt due to the plaintiff by one D, but was a mere contrivance for defeating or delaying the just claims of the other creditors of D, and retaining the properties for the benefit of or in trust for D.

When the facts are considered as a whole, there can be little doubt that the mortgage was a mere device for reser-ving the bulk of the available ussets of D. for the benefit of with which the document was executed, the subsequent negotiations for a composition with the creditors on a payment by them to get the mortgage revoked, the non-production of material books, the unsatisfactory character of the evidence relating to the adjustment, above all the reservation of the entire usufruct of the immoveable properties (mortgaged) for the wife and children of the debtor, not to speak of the relationship of the parties which in other circumstances might not be very material, all tend to the conclassion at which their Lordships have arrived (Mr. Ameer Ali) SETH GHUNSHAN DAS r. -Liability for-Redemption after expiry of 30 years -Liability to come into force only on expiry at the 30

A usufrectuary mortgage deed contained a stipulation that after the expiry of 30 years at the time of redemption interest shall be paid along with the principal at the rate of I per cent. per annum." Held, that, on the proper construction of the deed, the condition to pay interest only came into force on the expiry of the thirty years (714).

The stipulation in the deed did not bind the mortgagor to pay interest from the date of the mortgage. The fact that the property was to remain in the possession of the mortgagee through the whole of this period, and that he was to enjoy the rents and profits, leaves no room for doubt as to the meaning of the stipulation, and the intention of the parties. -Mortgage money realised in part by mortgagee long prior to redemption-Interest on-Right to-Usufruct to be enjoyed in lieu of interest-Provision in deed for.

In 1863, D lent 7,700 rupees to R, on a usufructuary mortgage. In 1877, a suit was instituted for redemption of that mortgage, and a decree was made on payment of 6,988 rupees, which sum was brought into Court. L appealed on the ground that that sum was not enough, and it was increased by a further sum of 8,956 rupees. While the appeal was pending, he had managed to take the money out of Court, and the mortgagors had then got possession. They paid, however, no more, and accordingly, in 1879, their redemption suit stood dismissed. D then applied to be, and was replaced in possession, and, having sued for mesne profits during the time he was out of possession, he got a decree in 1881, in execution of which the Court sold the mortgagors' equity of redemption at auction. D, being the buyer, was put into possession as full owner in 1883.

D continued in possession of the property as owner till 1897, and as owner he mortgaged it in 1886 to S. D got behind with his payments, and in 1897, on the application of S, the property was put up for sale. The respondents, the defendants in the suit, or their predecessors in interest, bought it and duly obtained possession. Notwithstanding D's purchase of the equity of redemption of the 1863 mortgage in 1881, D's name continued to be recorded in the revenue papers as mortgagee, and the proclamation of sale his family and indirectly for himself. The secrecy and haste | in 1897 similarly stated that the interest of the judgmentdebtor was only a mortgagee's interest. The sale certificate to the respondents was to the same effect.

In 1906, the plaintiffs and appellants, the representatives in interest of D, sued the respondents for redemption of the mortgage rights sold in 1897, the rights of D as mortgagee under the mortgage of 1863. In the suit the plaintiffs claimed that interest ought to be allowed to them on the 6,988 rupees, which D took out of court in 1878, and the question was whether they were entitled to the interest claimed by them. The mortgage of 1863 treated the usufruct as a whole, as a remuneration for the loan or any part of it, so long as it remained outstanding.

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the interest claimed.

In 1878 the mortgagees under the mortgage of 1863 got 6,988 rupees on account of a redemption, which is only now taking place; therefore they received it over thirty years too soon; therefore they should not only allow it in account, which they have done, but should allow over thirty years' interest on it too. Alternatively, since 1878 the principal mortgage moneys under the mortgage of 1863 must be deemed to have been paid off in the proportion of 6,988 to 15,944, and as the enjoyment of the usufruct by the mortgagees was conceded only in consideration of the continuance of the mortgage loan, the enjoyment should be reduced pro tanto from that date; in strictness, on redemption a part of the rents and profits collected should be returned or credited in account to the mortgagors in the above proportion, but for simplicity's sake interest at a sufficient rate will do as well. -Set-off of, against rents and profits-Mortgagee's right to, and liability to account only for balance.

A loan transaction in 1837 was effected by two deeds-(1) a Kabola, an absolute deed of sale, and (2) an ikrarnamah, or deed of agreement, constituting a mortgage. The ikrarnamah provided that, if the mortgagor paid, within ten years, a lump sum at the rate of 12 per cent. interest, he was to recover back the estate and the balance of collections, less charges. The mortgagee entered into possession. No interest on the principal sum was paid at the time stipulated, and in 1859, a redemption sait was brought by the mortgagor's heir for possession.

Held, that on the right construction of the agreement the interest was to be set off from time to time, against the rents and profits, and that the mortgagee was only to account to the mortgagor for any rents and profits and interest on the same which he might have received over and above the interest due to him upon the debt; that the agreement did not take the case out of an ordinary mortgage transaction; and that Bengal Reg. -Usufruct and - Mortgagee's right to both.

That a mortgagee in possession could retain the usufruct of the property mortgaged, together with any amount of interest secured to him by the mortgage deed is a state of the law which is not in conformity with the law which prevails in any civilised country, and it is not consistent with the first principles of justice (16). SETH SEETARAM r. (1874) 3 Suth. 15 = 9 M.J. 150 = ARJOON SINGH. R. & J's No. 29 (Oudh.)

 Without some special agreement or some special custom, a mortgagee in possession should not retain both the usufruct and the interest, but the usufruct should be treated as in satisfaction of the interest, on the mortgage. SETH (1874) 9 M.J. 150= SEETARAM D. ARJOON SINGH. R. & J.'s No. 29 (Oudh). = 3 Suth. 15.

The suit was for redemption of a mortgage dated July 1846. The mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage of a very formal and precise kind; and stated that M, the owner, mortgaged a taluk to O for the sum of Rs. 3,067, and fixed the amount of interest at "rupees three and two annas per cent. per month." The mortgage also stated that possession had been delivered to the mortgagee, and it contained the following clause:-"I moreover agree that whenever I be disposed to redeem I engage to repay every fraction of a pie of the principal and interest in a lump sum at the time when crops are not standing on the ground at the end (fallow portion of the agricultural year) of the month of Jeith, and then have the estate redeemed.

Held, on the construction of the mortgage, that the use fruct was to be set against the interest, and that it was not the intention of the parties that the mortgagee should have both the usufruct of the property and be paid interest at the stipulated rate of 43 per cent. from the time of the mortgage down to the period of redemption (197.8).

It would require very clear words to induce their Lordships to put such a construction upon the deed (198).

Semble: if it had been shown that the usufruct would not have amounted to the stipulated interest possibly an account might be a stipulated interest possibly and account might be a stipulated interest possibly an account might be a stipulated interest possibly and account might be a stipulated interest possible account might be a stipulated interes RAJAH AMEER count might have been decreed (198). -In 1867 the then Financial Commissioner ruled that wherever the land mortgaged was in possession of the mort gagee, no interest should be payable under the terms of the mortgage deed, in addition to the usufruct, after the 13th August 1860. It would appear from that ruling that at the time when he gave that ruling the law of Oudh was in the state, that a mortgagee could retain the usefruct of the property mortgaged, together with any amount of interest secured to him by the mortgage deed. The then Financial Commiscioner appears to have thought that that state of the law should not be recognised beyond a certain date, and their Lordships infer that after that date the law most be taken to have been altered, at all events so far as this, that without some special agreement or some special custom the mortgagee should not retain both the usufruct and the terest, but that the usufruct should be treated as in si faction of the interest on the mortgage, SETH SEETARM a, ARJOON SINGH.

The truth is that it is a fixed payment to be made in respect of a variable charge, and though it may be assumed that the amount was not fixed so as to prejudice the mortgagee, there is nothing to prevent the mortgagor and mortgagee entering into a bargain as to what sum should be charged annually for expenses that may or may not exceed the agreed figure (45). The deed further provided that notwithstanding the arrangement by which the mortgagee was to be put into possession a lease was to be granted by him to the mortgagor for a period of 2 years; and that, if the provisions of the mortgage deed as to redelivery of the estate to the mortgagee by the mortgagor at the ex-piration of the lease for 2 years were not carried out the mortgaged estate should at the end of the time stand sold to the mortgagee for the entire amount due inclusive of the balance of principal and interest, and further that the mortgagor should not sell any portion of the estate to any body except the mortgagee.

Held, that the agreement for the payment of the instalments of the purchase-money was the main obligation of the mortgage deed, and that the whole of the other provisions, however extensive and far-reaching they might be, were really nothing but the security to enforce that obligation, and were therefore invalid and unenforceable (46-7.) any due to the mortgagees and the redemption of the mortgage. The deed also stipulated that for the balance due to the mortgagees at the date fixed for payment they were to take and enjoy the whole or a portion of the mortgaged property, as if under an absolute sale at a rate fixed in the deed. If the entire mortgaged property would not cover the balance due, the mortgagees were to be at liberty to proceed against the mortgagors and their other property.

The mortgagors did not make any payments towards the mortgage; no settlement of accounts took place in 1820 or afterwards. The mortgagees and their successors in interest remained in full possession of the property from the date of the mortgage up to the date of suit in 1870.

In a suit brought by the mortgagors in 1870 for the recovery of the mortgaged property with mesne profits from 1867, on the ground that the mortgage debt had admittedly been liquidated by the usufruct at the close of the year 1866-7, held that the mortgagees had not become the alisolute owners of the property in 1820, that they continued to hold as mortgagees, and that the mortgagors were entitled to redeem them and to recover the mesne profits claimed. Setting aside of mokurruree lease thereof by mortgagor prior to mortgaage and-Mortgagee's suit for-Bona fide and operative nature of lease-Onus of Proof as to-Shifting of-Magistrate's order-Lessee in possession under.

The plaintiffs claimed under a Zur-i-peshgee granted by the Rajah of Ramnugger of certain mouzahs, including mouzah K. They brought the suit under the Zur-i-peshgee against B for possession of moozah K, and to set aside a mokurruree alleged to have been granted by the Rajah to him prior to the mortgage, under which he claimed the possession of the mouzah. The value of the mouzah was Rs, 850 per annum. The courts below concurrently found that the mokurruree was a fabricated and fraudulent instrument, and decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

On appeal to the Privy Council it was contended that the courts below had improperly shifted the owns, and that, in consequence of the form of the suit, it lay upon the respondents, the plaintiffs below, to show affirmatively that the mokurruree was invalid.

Held that, having regard to the form of the suit, which was not only for possession, but for setting aside the mokurruree, and having regard also to the fact that for sometime under a Magistrate's order, the appellant, or those whom he represented, were in possession under the mokurruree, in the first instance, it did lie upon the plaintiffs to give some evidence to impeach the validity of the mokurruree, and some onus was therefore upon them (66).

Held further that, that onus was satisfied, and a strong prima facie case to impeach the validity of the deed made out, and then the onus was shifted, and it was incumbent upon the appellant to show by satisfactory evidence that the mokurruree was really executed before the date of the Zur ipeshgee, and that it was granted bona fide for a real consi deration and intended to be operative as between the Rajah and B (66).

There are strong circumstances of suspicion in the case. B was the mookhtar of the Rajah, and notwithstanding that the Rajah had charged him with having acted collusively with the holders of the Zur-i-peshgee in obtaining it from him, he kept him in his service. It appears that the deed was not registered nor stamped at the time, the value of the mouzah was considerable, the rent very small, and there was | mortgage with possession were as follows:-

no evidence that any consideration was paid. Considering the relation of the parties, and the facts which have been referred to, the courts below seem to be perfectly justified in saying that unless the holder of the mokurruree gave satisfactory evidence of its execution and of its bona fides, they could not hold that it was a valid instrument as against the SHAMNARAIN D. But inasmuch as the receipts were in each year less than that balance and as (Account II, bearing only simple interest) the balance of interest did not carry interest, it really made no difference in the result whether the receipts were set off year by year or the sum of the receipts at the end of the account was deducted from the sum of the amounts due on Accout II. It was contended for the mortgagor that the receipts ought to have been deducted from the interest due year by year on Account I, which bore compound interest, so as to stop pro tanto the interest running on that interest, or fin other words) that the moragagee was bound to give credit for his receipts against the debt which was most burdensome to the -Mortgagee's liability for-Extent of-Mortgage deed -Construction.

On 8-9-1884, the plaintiff executed in favour of the defendant a mortgage of certain villages and a house for a term of seven years, with an extension of 5 years if so agreed, and gave the defendant possession accordingly was stipulated in the mortgage deed that the income of the mortgaged villages should be collected according to the rentroll, and that from that source the mortgagee should pay (1) the Government revenue; (2) a sum of Rs. 800 a year to himself, as interest and for the expenses of the mortgaged villages; and (3) should pay the balance to certain native bankers to whom the mortgagors were indebted. The plaintiffs sued for redemption alleging that the entire mortgage money had been paid off in the first year of the mortgage, and that they were entitled to redeem without further payment.

Held that, on the true construction of the mostgage deed, the mortgagee was liable only for such sums as were actually received by him, or, on his behalf, and for such sums, if any, as might have been received by him but for his own neglect or fault, and that he was not liable for the amount of the gross rentals as shown in the rent-roll. Two properties were mortgaged, the mortgagee getting possession and undertaking to realise the rents and profits and pay therewith the Government revenue assessed on each and out of the balance left to retain a certain sum as interest and pay another fixed sum as malikhana to the mortgagor. The deed provided that the mortgagor "shall be entitled and liable" in case the Government revenue is decreased or enhanced " and the mortgagee shall have nothing to do with it." As a matter of fact the revenue respectively assessed on the two properties was subsequently enhanced.

Held, on the construction of the mortgage deed, that the mortgagos did not agree to pay year by year separately the enhanced amount to meet the Government demand, that the clause in question did not in any way alter the liability of the mortgagee in possession to pay the Government revenue assessed upon the mortgaged properties, and that what the parties intended was that the amounts should be deducted from the malikana payable to the mortgagor.

One of the properties mortgaged passed into the hands of a stranger by purchase; he had the malikhana apportioned; and thereafter the mortgagee went on paying to the purchases the malikana payable to him minus the amount by which the revenue of the property had been enhanced, whilst omitting to make a similar deduction from the malikhana payable to the mortgagor.

In a suit by the purchaser for redemption, held that, having by his own laches failed to make the deduction, the mortgagee could not claim to have the amounts tacked on to the mortgage amount, whatever equities he might have against his mortgagor not being available as against the purchaser. Benefit of -Mortgagor's right to-English decisions -Authority and applicability of.

The question whether or not a purchase made by a mortgagee enures for the benefit of his mortgagor is determinable on the broad principles of equity and good conscience, and the principle of English decisions on the point is applicable only in so far as it is agreeable to general equity and good conscience and not when it is dependent upon any technical rule of English law. When the principle of the English decisions is applicable because it is agreeable to general equity and good conscience, the limits of its applicability are not to be taken as rigidly defined by the course of English decisions, although those decisions are undoubtedly valuable, in so far as they recognise the general equity of the principle and show how it has been applied by the Courts in England (159). gage there existed certain subordinate birt tenures in respect of the villages comprised in the mortgage. The mortgagee purchased the rights of the birtias in the different villages-In a suit brought for redemption of the mortgage, the question was whether the mortgagors could, upon paying the purchase-money of the birts, plus the original mortgage money, redeem the estate as it was then enjoyed by the mortgagee; or whether the mortgagee was entitled in any case to retain the rights and interests of the birtia zemindars purchased by him as an absolute under-proprietary tenure in subordination to the talookdar, and to have a subsettlement on that basis.

The stipulations in the deed of mortgage plainly indicated that the mortgagee, until redemption, was to be the zemindar de facto of the estate, with all the rights, privileges and powers of a zemindar as between him and the sub-tenants; that the subject of the mort gage was the talookdary interest, with all its incidents, whatever that might include. The inadequacy of the consideration paid by the mortgagee for the purchase of the rights of the birtias afforded a strong argument for supposing that the transactions might have been in the nature of compromises, which the powers of talookdar were exerted to effect on favourable terms. After his purchase, and up to the date of the institution of the suit, the mortgagee treated the birt tenures as merged in the talook. He did not take any steps to keep them alive as distinct sub-tenures for his own benefit. On the contrary, at the time of the first summary settlement after annexation he never sought to engage for those villages as birtia, and, on the summary settlement after Lord Canning's Proclamation, he did in fact engage for them as talookdar, and as parcel of the talook. The mortgagee, taking advantage of his position of talookdar de facto, had acquired the birts and allowed them to merge in the talooka.

Held that, on repayment of the original mortgage amount and of the amount expended by the mortgagee in purchasing the birts, the mortgagors was entitled to re-enter on the estate with all the rights and privileges enjoyed by the mortgagee (1534). Sub-tenure existing at date of mortgage-Purchase of-Benefit of-Mortgagor's right to.

Their Lordships are not prepared to affirm the broad proposition that every purchase by a mortgagee of a subtenure existing at the date of the mortgage must be taken to have been made for the benefit of the mortgagor, so as to enhance the value of the mortgaged property, and make the whole, including the sub-tenure, subject to the right of redemption upon equitable terms. It may well be that when the estate mortgaged is a Zemindary in Lower Bengal out of which a putnee tenure has been granted, or one within the ambit of which there is an ancient mokurraree istimrari tenure, a mortgagee of the zemindary, though in possassion, might purchase with his own funds and keep alive for his own benefit that putnee or mokarrarree. In such cases the mortgagee can hardly be said to have derived from his mortgagor any peculiar means or facilities for making the purchase which would not be possessed by a stranger, and may therefore be held entitled equally with a stranger, to make it for his own benefit. In such cases also the putnee, if the putneedar failed to fulfit his obligations would not be resumable by the Zemindar, and the zemindary would always have been held subject to the mokurraree (153). principal and interest for un-expired portion of term-Maintainability.

A mortgage bond, dated 28-12-1867, executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff, provided that the defendant was to pay interest on the principal sum at a certain rate, and to repay the principal in twelve years from the date of the bond, but that the plaintiff was not either bound to accept payment, or entitled to demand payment, within the said time. Then there was provision for the payment of the interest in three instalments annually. bond further provided: -If any obstruction be caused either by me or my men in respect of any of the conditions aforesaid, you are competent to give me two months' notice, and if I do not within that term fulfil the conditions entered into with you, to sell by auction yourself the mortgaged property or portions thereof, according to your pleasure, to pay yourself at once the principal due to you, and the interest payable on the full amount of principal for the unexpired portion of the twelve years, and to deliver to me the remainder, if any,

It appeared that a portion of the interest became in arrear, and that the plaintiff gave notice in October 1869 of his intention to sell under that power, the plaintiff supposing that he had the power to sell for the purpose of realizing the principal and the interest up to the end of the twelve years. The defendant disputed that right of the plaintiff to sell for that amount on the mere ground of nonpayment of interest, which he alleged not to be an obstruction within the meaning of the bond. The parties not being able to come to a final agreement as to the conditions of sale, the plaintiff brought the suit out of which the appeal arose claiming the full amount of the mortgage money with interest for 12 years.

Held that, the suit was not maintainable, either as an action for damages for the amount which plaintiff could have obtained by the sale, or on the bond itself (60).

The action is not maintainable on the bond itself, inasmuch as no such right of action if not expressly given by the words of the bond, is to be implied from it (60). VENKATAVARADA IYENGAR 2. VENKATA LUCHMAMAL.

case the property of the mortgagor is pledged to secure the debt, and when the amount secured is paid, the property pledged must be returned to the owner. The main difference between a usufructuary mortgage and an ordinary mortgage is that in the former it is part of the initial agreement by which the security is created that the mortgagee shall at once go into possession of the mortgaged property and apply the proceeds he may derive from the use and occupation of it in discharge of the mortgage debt; while in the case of an ordinary mortgage of the usual sort it is in general not the initial intention of the parties that the mortgagee should go into possession of the property pledged immediately or at all, although he is empowered to do so if the interest on the mortgage money be not paid. Should be go into possession, he must account for the receipts just as must the usufructuary mortgagee. The mortgagee obtained possession in pursuance of the mortgage and retained possession till 14-1-1903 when he redelivered the villages to the mortgagor. He did not in fact receive by the collection of the rents sufficient to discharge the principal of the loan with interest as mentioned in the deed. A mortgagre is not an assurer of the continuation of the same rate of profit which his mortgagor was able to raise. Much depends, in India, on personal qualities. In a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee is chargeable with profits actually received by him, and not with profits which he might have received with common care and attention. Decree for possession obtained by mortgagee in suit brought therefor after bar of limitation-Effect,

In 1904, the mortgagees under a usufructuary mortgage of the year 1842 instituted a suit against the mortgagors for possession of the mortgaged properties as mortgagees and obtained a decree based upon their rights as mortgagees. In a suit brought in 1907 for redemption of the same mortgage the mortgagees contended that the suit having been brought more than 60 years after the date of the mortgage was barred under Art. 148 of the Limitation Act, 1877. The mortgagors sought to get over this plea by contending that, inasmuch as, though the suit of 1804 was brought by the mortgagees after the period of 60 years provided by art. 148, they claimed the estate not, as absolute owners but only as mortgagees, they were estopped in the present suit from resisting the right to redeem by Expl. II to S. 13 of the Code of 1882. Held, over-ruling the contention, that the suit of 1904 was no bar.

The plea of the mortgagor that he was entitled to redeem was irrelevant to the suit of 1904 which was by the mortgagee for possession as such. The title of the mortgagor as mortgagor was not in question in that suit, nor could he as a defendant to that suit have converted it into one in which he could have obtained a decree for redemption (81-2). -Lease by mort gagee to mort gagor after bar of limi tation-Description of lessor as usufructuary mortgage in -Effect.

After the expiry of the period allowed for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage the mortgagee granted a lease of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor, the lessor being described in the grant as usufructuary mortgagee. In a suit for redemption of the mortgage subsequently instituted by the mortgagor, he contended that the mortgagee was estopped from repudiating his character as mortgagee and that the description of the lessor in the lease amounted to a representation which he was bound to make good. Their Lordships over-ruled both those contentions.

If the lessor were seeking to impeach the lease on the ground that he was not usufructuary mortgagee he would be estopped. But the lessee had the full benefit of the lease, and for matters outside the lease, it contains nothing to preclude the lessor from asserting his true title (108).

In order to succeed on the other ground (that the decription of the lessor amounted to a representation which he was bound to make good) the mortgagors must show that the description of the lessor was an essential part of the contract, that the lessee made the contract in reliance on those terms, and that her position was in some way altered 2 Suth. 346 = 2 Sar. 573. by the terms in which her lessor spoke of himself. #### MESNE PROFITS PRIOR TO-MORTGAGOR'S RIGHT TO.

Defendant bona fide transferce for value without notice-Mortgage paid off out of usufruct years before.

The suit was for the recovery of possession of certain property with mesne profits for six years before suit. The plaintiff's case was that the suit property had been mortgaged with possession by their predecessors in interest to the predecessors in interest of the defendants, that the mortgage had been paid off out of the usufruct years before the institution of the suit, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to recover possession with six years' mesne profits. The defendants were bone hide purchasers of the suit property for value, and without notice of the suit mortgage. And the plaintiffs were guilty of great laches in instituting the suit. Further, the case was far from being a clear one.

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiffs, though entitled to a decree for redemption, were not entitled to recover mesne profits for any period prior to the date of the suit, and were entitled to such profits only from the date of the suit (66-7). (Sir James W. Colvile.)

ONUS ON MORTGAGOR IN.

-Absolute title-Defence plea of, found against-Long possession with defendant.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendants certain lands as being part of the ancient jenm or domain of his family. By the plaintiff's own showing his family had been out of possession of the suit lands for nearly 120 years, and the defend-ants' family had been in possession of them for nearly 100 years. In order to avoid the effect of that long lapse of time, the plaintiff relied upon a series of mortgages executed by his family to the defendant's family or to persons who had transferred their interest to the defendant's family. Of those mortgages the latest was what was called an othi or usufructuary mortgage. If that mortgage could not be proved, the long possession of the defendants would, under the law of limitation, bar the title of the plaintiff.

The defendants, instead of resting their defence simply upon possession, lapse of time, and lack of evidence on the plaintiff's part, set up the story, which was found to be false, that the jenm or domain of the lands in dispute never belonged to the plaintiff's family at all, but was from ancient and immemorial time the jenm of the defendant.

Held, that nevertheless, the plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own title, and he must prove the Otti mortgage set up by him (419), (Sir Arthur Hobbonse.) THEKKINIVETATH KIRANGATH MANAKKAL NARA-VANAN NAMBUDRIPAD P. IRINGALLUR THARAKATH SANKUNNI THARAVANAR. (1881) Bald. 418.

SECOND SUIT-MAINTAINABILITY.

-Prior decree for redemption-Possession recovered by mortgagor under-Appeal by mortgagee from decree-Enhancement of mortgage amount in-Mortgagor's default to pay enhanced amount and restitution to mortgagee of possession and mesne profits for period of dispossession-Sale of equity of redemption in execution of decree for mesne profits and purchase thereof by mortgagee-Effect.

A decree for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage was passed under which the mortgagor was put in possession of the mortgaged property on payment of the sum decreed to the mortgagee. On appeal by the mortgagee, the amount payable on redemption was, however, increased. The mortgagor failed to pay the additional amount decreed on appeal whereupon the mortgagee applied to the original Court for possession and for mesne profits for the period during which he had been out of possession. An order for payment of mesne profits was made, and, in execution thereof, the mortgagee caused the sale of and purchased the equity of redemption himself.

In a second suit for redemption brought by an assignee of the mortgagor, on the ground that the order for payment of mesne profits was wholly without jurisdiction, that it and all the proceedings thereunder, culminating in the execution sale at which the mortgagee purchased were without jurisdiction and nullities and conveyed no title to the mortgageepurchaser, held, that the suit was wholly misconceived, and ought to be dismissed.

The Court which awarded the mesne profits had full jurisdiction in that behalf; if it exercised the jurisdiction wrongly, the persons aggrieved had their remedy under the provisions of the C.P.C., either by appeal to the High Court or by an application for revision. Objection was in fact taken under S. 311 of C. P. C. of 1882, to the sale for mesne profits which was disallowed, and there was no appeal from that order. (Mr. Amter Ali.) PARBHU DYAL v. KALYAN DAS. The only question in the case was as to the validity of certain transactions which took place in May and June 1881, affecting the title to a moiety of a village called N. The parties to the transaction were, first, the plaintiff, the widow of one G, and, secondly, the defendant. D, under whom the other defendant, H, claimed by virtue of a deed

The village N stood in the name of G, husband of the plaintiff. He was recorded in the Collector's books as the owner. In May and June 1881, the plaintiff appeared before the patwari, acknowledged D's title to one moiety of the village, claiming the other moiety for herself, and a mutation of names was effected from that of G into those of the plaintiff herself and of D, one moiety each. The mutation of names was followed by possession on the part of D by receipts of rents and profits, and she was found to be in possession in a proceeding before the Revenue Court in November 1883, when she executed the deed of gift to H, and he applied for possession.

In a suit by the plaintiff for a declaration of title to the village N, and for the cancellation of the order of 27th June, 1881, for change of names in the record-of-rights, on the ground that the plaintiff's assent to such change had been obtained by intimidation, held, reversing the High Court and restoring the Court below, that the plaintiff had failed to prove that in effecting the mutation of names she acted under intimidation, and that her suit was rightly dismissed by the sub-Judge. -Presumption that it was made at instance of one of parties to deed.

When a mutation of names has been made pursuant to a deed the reasonable presumption is that it would not have been made except on the application of one of the parties to the deed, of the donor where he is proved to have been on the spot (30). On the death of a talukdar, who was entered in List II of the Oudh Estates Act, and who remained legal owner until his death in 1878, his legal title passed to the plaintiff, A few days after the death of the talookdar, plaintiff and his cousin presented an application for mutation to their uncle K, therein admitting the title of K to succeed to the Estate; mutation was effected in favour of A'; and possession of the estate was handed over to him in consequence. In 1889, plaintiff, however, sued K for possession of the estate on the strength of his legal title, and K pleaded, inter alia, that, by reason of the mutation proceedings aforesaid and of plaintiff's representations and admissions therein of K's rights, plaintiff was debarred from recovering the estate. Held, that the mutation proceedings did not bar the right of the plaintiff to assert his legal title.

Supposing that in 1878 plaintiff believed the representations to be true and made them spontaneously, why should he not assert the true state of the case after he has learned it? It would be absurd to suppose that the plaintiff made any misrepresentation to the defendant; neither was the situation of the defendant altered in any way to his prejudice. No consideration was given by the defendant, nor is there anything in the transaction to create a trust. Possibly it might have given the defendant a possession on which time would run; but if so, time has not run long enough to create a bar. The defendant relied upon the admission of title made by the plaintiff; but a gratuitous admission may be withdrawn unless there is some obligation not to withdraw if and there is not here any title on which such an admission can rest. If then, there is no transfer, no estoppel, no har by time, no trust, why should not the plaintiff assert his legal rights, whatever he may, in ignorance of the facts or in deference to his uncle, or for any other cause not injurious to the defendant, have admitted? British Crown-Relationship between-Control of British Crown over States-Nature and extent of-Dir tinction-Causes of.

Under the sovereign power delegated to the East India Company up to 1858, and since exercised direct ly on behalf of the Crown, new territories have been added to the actual dominions of the Crown; and under it, many and various powers, rights, and jurisdic tions have been acquired and exercised over territories which yet remain outside the King's dominions. As to the rights and powers of control possessed and exercised over the Native States in India with the corresponding restrictions upon the independent action of those States, some, no doubt, are the necessary consequence of the surrainty vested in the predominant power. Thus, as is recited in 39 and 40 Vict., c. 46, the Indian States, in alliance with the Crown, have "no connexions, engagements, or com-munications with foreign powers." But apart from and beyond the consequences, whatever they may be, flowing from this general source, rights of very varying kinds have been established in connexion with the several States. They The Indian Foreign have different historical origins, Jurisdiction and Extradition Act (XXI of 1879) recites that by treaty, capitulation, agreement, grant, usage, sufferance and other lawful means the Governor-General of India in Council has power and jurisdiction within divers places be yond the limits of British India." made. It was not done at the instance of A's witlow or after consultation with her, and it was evidently a mere change of investment made at the assumed discretion of V. The V. E. A. firm credited the fund, which then amounted to over Rs. 10,000, in their books under the heading "K. M. A. R. R. M." (which denoted the firm of R), "maral A. M. V. R,"

In 1895 a portion of the amount was withdrawn, and shortly afterwards there was a further deposit. The withdrawal and further deposit were apparently made by the A. M. V. R. firm, and there was no direct dealing between either the R. M. A. R. R. M. firm or A", widow and the V. E. A. firm. Interest was duly credited on the deposits by the V. E. A. firm, and accounts were rendered annually to the A. M. V. R. firm, and that continued till 1904, when the A. M. V. R. firm, having opened a branch of their own in Rangson, the balance of the fund was at their request paid over to them by the V. E. A. firm and the V. E. A. deposit account was finally closed. During the whole of that period there was no communication of any sort between R's firm or R's widow and the V. E. A. firm, and no reference was made to either of them or to the appellant, the adopted son of R, who was then of full age, when the V. E. A. account was closed. Between 1904 and 1917, when the suit was filed, A", widow and the appellant, her adopted son, made numerous withdrawals from the A. M. V. R. firm, and apparently regarded it as solely responsible to them for the deposit.

Held, affirming the High Court, that, as regards the liability of the V. E. A. firm to the appellant for the fund which had been deposited with them by V's firm, no conclusion could be based upon the mere use of the word "muruf"; that it was a question to be decided upon all the circumstances of the case whether the intention was that Vand his firm, while remaining directly responsible to those to whom the beneficial interest in the fund belonged, should have authority to change its investment from time to time and to give a valid discharge for its repayment, and that, in view of the relationship of the parties, the course of dealing between them, and the other facts of the case, the only possible inference was that V and his firm were alone to be responsible to the appellant and his mother, and that the repayment in 1904 by the V.E.A. firm to V's firm, with whom alone they had dealt, was a good discharge of their liability.

The maraldar is clearly something more than a bare agent, the limit of his powers and responsibilities depending upon the understanding between the parties. (Sir George Loundes.) Commissioners appointed under-Finding of.

Property being held by Government freed and discharged from all claims and incumbrances-Finding of-Jurisdiction as to-Claim inconsistent with-Maintainability in Civil Courts,

The plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to one-eighth of a perpetual annuity of Rs. 600 a month, which was granted in 1858 to their father M, by the late Nawab Nazim. They demanded payment of the annuity with arrears from the Government of India, on the ground that the Government held property on which, as they alleged, the annuity was charged. For the purposes of the suit the plaintiff's limited their claim to pergunnah G, which was the property of the Nawab in 1858, when the annuity was granted, and was at the date of the suit held by the Government.

Complying with the exigency of the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act of 1873, the plaintiff had brought in their claim Nazim".

It was contended on the part of the plaintiffs-appellants that, the Nawab Nazim having admittedly executed a conveyance of the suit property to the second defendant in the year 1859, it was not what may be called Nizamut property, and that the Commissioners had no jurisdiction to deal with it or to declare it to be Nizamut property whether this property had been conveyed to the 2nd defendant; whether the conveyance was valid; whether it was voluntary; whether it was collusive; or whether it was revocable-all these were questions which would come under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners to decide under S. 12 of the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act of 1873; and they have held that this property was immoveable property held by the Government for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab. Their Lordships have no doubt that was within the jurisdiction of the Commissioners (43-4). (Sir Robert P. Collier.) OMRAO BEGUM D. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA. -Liability of Bank for payment in case of-Conditions-Note identifiable but number missing-Effect.

On a claim for payment made against a private Banking Corporation on a bank-note issued by it but damaged by honest accident, it is essential to investigate whether there is sufficient of the note remaining to establish its identity as a note of the bank, and to contain all the necessary elements that render it valid and effectual as a negotiable document. To some extent this must depend upon verbal evidence as well as upon pieces of the document. These pieces must be identified, their condition must be explained, and they must be shown to be parts of one and the same instrument. Where every one of these conditions has been satisfied, where it is not denied that the pieces are pieces of one of the notes of the defendant bank, and where it is not, and could not not be, suggested that the missing particles could be used in building up another note, the Bank cannot refuse payment on the ground that the number is missing. #### BANKER'S CHEQUE.

-Distinction.

A banker's cheque is a peculiar sort of instrument, in many respects resembling a bill of exchange, but in some entirely different. A cheque does not require acceptance; in the ordinary course it is never accepted; it is not intended for circulation, it is given for immediate payment; it is not entitled to days of grace; and though it is, strictly speaking, an order upon a debtor by a creditor to pay to a third person the whole or part of a debt, yet, in the ordinary understanding of persons, it is not so considered. It is more like an appropriation of what is treated as ready money in the hands of the banker, and in giving the order to appropriate to a creditor, the person giving the cheque must be considered as the person primarily liable to pay, who orders his debt to be paid at a particular place, and as being much in the same position as the maker of a promissory note, or the acceptor of a bill of exchange, payable at a particular place and not elsewhere, who has no right to insist on immediate presentment at that place. The case of a cheque is not similar to that of regular Bills of Exchange, inland or foreign, drawn payable at or after date (69-70). (Mr. Baron Parke.) RAMCHURN MULLICK v. LUTCHMEECHUND (1854 9 Moo. P. C. 46= RADAKISSEN. 2 C. L. R. (Eng.) 1664.

BILL PAVABLE AFTER DATE.

Presentment of, at due date-Due notice-Necessity. With respect to all Bills of Exchange payable after date it is fully settled, that neither the want of presentment at the time the Bill is due, nor the want of due notice, are excused, because the drawer has continued solvent, or the holder incurred no loss by non-presentment, or want of regular notice (68). BILL PAYABLE AT, OR A CERTAIN TIME AFTER, SIGHT-PRESENTMENT FOR ACCEPTANCE OF.

-Time of-Reasonableness of-Decision of Court below as to-Privy Council's interference with.

In a case in which the Court decided that a Bill of Exchange payable at, or a certain time after, sight, was not presented for acceptance in a reasonable time, their Lordships observed that they would not reverse the judgment below on a matter of fact, unless they were quite satisfied that the Court below were wrong, because their knowledge of local circumstances and the character and appearance of the witnesses enabled them to form a more correct opinion than a tribunal of appeal in England possibly could (67). (Mr. Baron Park) RAMCHURN MULLICK D. LUTCHMEECHUND RADA-KISSEN. (1854) 9 Moo. P. C. 46=2 C L. R. (Eng.) 1664

Time of-Reasonalleness of-Evidence.

The appeal arose out of an action of assumpsit on a foreign Bill of Exchange, brought by the appellant, 25 endorsee, against the respondents, as drawers. The Bill was drawn at Calcutta, on 16-2-1848, on Dent & Co., at Hoos kong, payable to the respondents, or order, sixty days after sight, and endorsed by them in blank, and delivered to M. and by him endorsed to the appellant.

The Bill was transmitted to Hongkong, and presented on the 24th of October in that year, to Dent & Co., for acceptance, who refused to accept the same, whereupon the thereof was served on the respondents, at their house of business in Calcutta, by the appellant. The respondents, however, refused to pay the amount due on the Bill, whereupon the appellant, as indorsee, brought the action out of which the appeal arose against them as drawers and endorsers. The question for decision was, whether the Bill of Exchange on which the action was brought, was presented for acceptance in a reasonable time,

BILL PAYABLE AT OR A CERTAIN TIME AFTER, SIGHT-PRESENTMENT FOR ACCEPTANCE OF-(Contd. )

The Court below held that the presentment was not made in reasonable time. The Court below concluded from the evidence, that the Bill was improperly detained for a portion at least of the time which elapsed between 16-2-1848, when it was drawn, and the 28th of July, when it was endorsed over by M, the then holder, to the plaintiff. They thought that the evidence proved, that for the whole of that time, a period of more than 5 months, Bills on China were altogether unsaleable in Calcutta; that such was the permanent and regular state of the market; and that although, if there was a reasonable prospect of the state of things being better in a short time, the holder would have had a right, with a view to his own interests, to keep the Bill for some time, he had no such right when there was no hope of the amendment of that state of thing.

Held that, the evidence fully justified the conclusion drawn from it by the Court below, and that the Court below, deciding on facts as a jury, were perfectly right (67). (Mr. Baron Parke.) RAMCHURN MULLICK v. LUTCHMEE-(1854) 9 Moo. P. C. 46= CHUND RADAKISSEN. 2 C. L. R. (Eng.) 1664.

-Time of-Reasonableness of-Question as to-Mixed late and fact.

The question whether a Bill of Exchange, payable at, or a certain time after, sight, has been presented for acceptance in a reasonable time is a mixed question of law and fact, for the determination of a jury, with the assistance of a Judge, where trial by jury exists, and for the determination of the Court, where they exercise the functions of a jury as well as those of Judges (66). (Mr. Baron Parke.) RAM-CHURN MULLICK v. LUTCHMEECHUND RADAKISSEN.

Time of-Reasonableness of-Rule as to-Applicability-Solvency of drawer-Loss by lacker-Proof of-Absence of-Effect.

It was urged that as the drawers remained perfectly solvent from the date of the Bill (payable at, or a certain time after, sight) to the present time, the rule as to presenting in a reasonable time did not apply, and that there was no laches which would constitute a defence by the drawers, unless they had incurred a loss by that laches. The Court below decided that the solvency of the drawers and the want of proof of actual loss by laches, constituted no answer to the objection

We think the Court below were right. We agree with the Court below, that the continued solvency of the drawers does not prevent the application of the rule, that the Bill must be presented in a reasonable time, with reference to the interest of the drawer to put the Bill into circulation, or the interest of the drawee to have the bill speedily presented (68.9). (Mr. Baron Parke.) RAMCHURN MULLICK v. LUTCHMEECHUND RADAKISSEN.

BILL PAYABLE AT, OR A CERTAIN TIME AFTER, SIGHT-PRESENTMENT FOR ACCEPTANCE OF-

acceptance of a foreign or other Bill of Exchange, payable at or a certain time after, sight. How otherwise can the time the Isill has to run be fixed, where it is payable after sight? Indeed, the statute of 3 and 4 Anne, c. 9, s. 7, makes an inland Bill of Exchange, received in satisfaction of a debt, a full and complete payment if the holder does not take his due course to obtain payment thereof, by endeavouring to get the same accepted and paid, and, therefore, in some cases, undoubtedly, it requires the presentment for acceptance; and has the law as been long settled that the holder of a Bill, payable after date, is not obliged to present it for acceptance, it must apply to Bills payable on or after sight. Presentment, then, being necessary for acceptance, the inconvenience of an indefinite postponement of the time of payment of such a liftl, which the unlimited power of presenting when the holder might please would necessarily lead to, long ago suggested that there should be a limit. In some foreign nations it is provided for by positive enactment, fixing the times of presentment with reference to the places where the Bill is drawn, and where the drawee resides, as in the French " Code de Commerce." But in our law, there being no such fixed limit by enactment, where there is no usage of trade to fix the time, it has long been established, that such Bill must be presented in a reasonable time. This rule is adopted for want of a better law not defining the time precisely (65-6). (Mr. Baron Parke.) RAMCHURN MULLICK v. LUTCHMEECHUND RADA-KISSEN. (1854) 9 Moo. P.C. 46 = 2 C. L. R. DRAWER OF.

-Acceptor's credit-Failure to avail himself of-Acceptance given at a time when acceptor owes no money to drawer-Discounting of-Effect.

When a drawer discounts an acceptance which acceptance is given at a time when the acceptor owes no money to the drawer, it is idle to say that the drawer does not avail himself of the acceptor's credit (57). -Liability of, to reimburs: holder for value on dishonour by acceptor-DIA draft.

Drawers of bills of exchange who discount them with a bank are bound, in case of dishonour by the acceptors, to compensate the holder for value (that is, the Bank) unless they (the drawers) can show that, when they discounted the bills, they bargained that the transaction should be without recourse. To relieve the drawers from their liabi-lity and to limit the Bank's prima facie right of recourse against themselves (the drawers), they must show some contract with the Bank to that effect, or some breach of contract or of duty on the part of the Bank, which would have that effect in law.

Where drawers, when discounting the drafts, made over documents of title (bills of lading) to the discounting Bank, and the drafts were marked D/A (which meant "Documents against acceptance"), held that the drawers' description of the drafts as D/A was, in effect, a direction by them to the Bank to surrender the documents to the acceptors against their acceptance, that, consequently, on the Bank presenting the drafts for acceptance to the drawees, and acceptance being duly given, the Bank were justified in handing over the shipping documents to the acceptors, and contend, that the law does not require a presentment for that on the drafts being subsequently dishonoured at

INDORSER OF.

-Payment to holder by-Securities given by acceptor-Benefit of-Right to-Rule as to-Promissory note-Applicability of rule to.

It is a rule of equity that if the indorser of a biil of exchange pays the holder of it he is entitled to the benefit of the securities given by the acceptor which the holder has in his hands at the time of the payment, and upon which he has no claim except for the bill itself. The same rule is applicable to the indorser of a promissory note. It is possible that there may be circumstances which would create an exception to this rule (29).

MATERIAL ALTERATION OF.

-Due date-Memorandum on top right hand corner of bill as to-Alteration of-Material alteration not a New stamping of bill-Necessity-Stamp Act 11 of 1899, S. 14.

Certain Manchester firms who sold goods to the appellants, merchants in Bombay, drew drafts on the appellants, with shipping documents attached and discounted them with the repondent's bank in London. The respondents then sent the drafts to their Bombay branch to be presented to the appellants for acceptance and for subsequent collection. The drafts fell due generally sixty or ninety, though sometimes 120, days after sight, and on presentation they were accepted. When most, but not all, of the drafts had been already accepted, the dates of payment of the bills were, at the instance of the appellants and with the consent of the respondents, extended by the sellers, the Manchester

In ordinary course, the clerks at the respondent's Bombay branch affixed the necessary revenue stamps to drafts before presenting them for acceptance and also, as a general rule, though not invariably, stamped the word " Due " on the top right-hand corner of the draft and after acceptance added to it the date for presenting the bill for payment according to its usance with the days of grace added. When the duration of a bill was extended, they usually struck through this marginal date and substituted the extended

Held, (1) that the arrangements detailed above did not constitute a discharge by mutual consent of the drawers, indorsers, and acceptors of the bills of exchange;

(2) that the alteration of the memorandum as to the due date made on the top right-hand corner of a bill did not constitute a material alteration of the bill which in law avoided it; and

itself was not altered at all. Of course, if the due date on the face of the bill had been altered, the alteration would have been material, but what was done did not, in fact, affect the bill, nor was it done with any such intention. The date form d no part of the bill, nor did its alteration affect the contract. It was a mere docket for office purposes. If a slip of paper, with the date on it had been pinned on to the bill, the two holes made by the pin in the paper would have been no less liable to be called an alteration (358).

As to the stamp objection, no second instrument, that is, no bill of exchange, was written on the old stamped paper at all. The old instrument remained unaffected, and nothing was added to or taken from it (359). (Viscount Sumner.) PESTONJI & CO. p. COX & CO. (1928) 55 I. A. 353=

It is of the utmost importance that the name of a person or firm to be charged upon a negotiable instrument should be clearly stated on the face or on the back of the document, so that the responsibility is made plain and can instantly be recognised as the document passes from hand to hand.

It is not sufficient that the principal's name should be "in some way "disclosed; it must be disclosed in such a way that on any fair interpretation of the instrument his name is the real name of the person liable upon the bill.

name is the real name of the person liable upon the bill.

Ss. 26, 27 and 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act contain nothing inconsistent with these principles, and nothing to support the contention that in an action on a bill of exchange or promissory note against a person whose name properly appears as a party to the instrument it is open either by way of claim or defence to show that the signatory was in reality acting for an undisclosed principal.

The words "Acting Superintendent, etc." added to M's name at the end of the document is nothing but a description of M's position, and is certainly not a signature in the form necessary for an agent signing on a principal's behalf. The words "By the order of Sirkar, etc." at the beginning of the hundi mean no more than that M had been directed to execute the hundi and do not necessarily imply that he had been authorised to bind his principal by the same. INDORSEE OF — LIABILITY TO SUBSEQUENT INDORSEE—COLLATERAL AGREEMENT AS TO—NATURE OF—AGREEMENT GOING TO ROOT OF CONTRACT OR MERE TERM THE BREACH OF WHICH SOUNDED IN DAMAGES—(Contd.)

Held that, in the circumstances of the case, the conclusions of the courts below were conclusions of fact and could not be called matters of law as being a legal construction put upon agreed words.

The case was not one, in which it would have been possible to find as facts the precise words used. The agreement itself resulted from conversations in the way of business, of which no note was made, and the time which had elapsed between their date and the hearing in Court was so great as to make the recovery of the actual text of the bargain a hopeless task. -Tat

In a suit by an indorsee of hundies against a prior indorsee and the maker to recover the amount of them, the prior indorsee set up a collateral parol agreement between himself and the plaintiff that his liability should be dependent on the plaintiff's procuring the maker to give further security by way of mortgage for payment of the notes. The question for decision was whether the agreement as to the security to be given was of such a character as to go to the root of the whole contract or was no more than a term, the breach of which sounded in damages and in the circumstances only nominal damages.

Held, affirming the courts below, that the stipulation as to further security was a condition precedent to the liability of the prior indorsee and that the hreach thereof went to the root of the agreement between the parties, so as to put an end to any further liability on the part of the prior indorsee. INTEREST-COLLATERAL AGREEMENT AS TO.

Enforceability of—Hundi silent as to interest.

Hundies drawn by defendant upon himself in plaintiff's favour were silent as to interest. But there was a collateral agreement in writing that interest should be paid at 30 per cent. per annum; and, in a suit brought upon the hundies, it was found that the dealing with interest by a collateral agreement, and not on the face of the hundies, was in accordance with the custom prevailing in the district, amongst the class affected by the suit.

Held that the plaintiff's right to interest as provided by the collateral agreement was not affected by S. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

S. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act does not purport to deprive those dealing with such instruments of the freedom of contract possessed by other contracting parties. It purports to confer a right to interest, not to take away such a right otherwise existing.

When a plaintiff has to rely upon the section as the ground of his claim to interest, no doubt the terms of the section must be followed. But to read the section as depriving him of a contractual right of interest would be to read into it something which it does not say, and which cannot reasonably be implied from its language. One B, who was a director of a bank, had been allowed by the bank's manager, R, to become indebted in a large sum to the bank, and, in view of the approaching half-yearly audit, it was thought desirable that the account should be squared in some way as not to show the director as a debtor to the bank. The first respondent was accordingly persuaded to execute a promissory note so as to show him as the bank's debtor for the amount of B's indebtedness, and that amount was credited in the books of the bank to B, thus wiping out his indebtedness. No part of the amount for which the note was executed came into the hands of the first respondent, and he apparently had nothing to gain by the transaction, the plain effect of which was to substitute him as a debtor to the bank for the amount of B's indebtedness in the place of B.

Held that the true effect of the transaction was that as between the first respondent and the bank the promissory note was an effective contract, the credit to B being a sufficient consideration, but that as between B and the first respondent, the former undertook to discharge the liability to the bank.

The learned Judges of the Chief Court seem to have come to the conclusion that the first respondent signed the promissory note merely as the agent of B, and that therefore the bank could not sue him upon it as principal. They thought that the case came within the exception to S. 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Their Lordships are unable to take this view of the transaction. The theory of agency is negatived by the evidence of both the first respondent himself and his witness B. But, apart from this, their Lordships are satisfied that the essence of the tripartite arrangement was to conceal B's indebtedness from the bank and to make the bank believe that the first respondent was their debtor for the amount of B's indebtedness and interest. The first respondent lent himself to this scheme fully understanding that its object was the deception of the bank, and under these circumstances it would be impossible for their Lordships to hold that he was induced by the bank to believe that he would not be held liable upon his written contract. An award made by arbitrators to whom certain dispotes between the respondent and the appellants were referred found a certain sum to be due by the appellants to the respondent, and provided for the payment in cash of a portion thereof, and for the execution of two promissory notes by the appellants to the respondent for the balance. Two promissory notes were accordingly executed by the appellants in favour of the respondent on the same day, and were accepted by the latter.

Held that the arrangement for the discharge of the amount found due by means of the promissory notes only expressed the mode of payment contemplated and arranged for at the time, that the notes were only given as conditional payment, and that, on the notes being for any reason found to be enforceable, the respondent had a right to bring an action for the unpaid balance of the sum found due, its for the amount of the promissory notes (147).

The substance of the award is that the specified amount was actually due from the appellants to the respondent, and the promissory notes only expressed the mode of payment contemplated and arranged for at the time. The fact that payment in the form contemplated has failed does not affect the substance of the award or the basis of the arrangement, which was liability (147). (Lord Moniton.) For the amount of B's indebtedness to a bank, the first respondent executed a promissory note in favour of the bank, the effect of the transaction being to substitute him as a debtor of the bank for the said sum in the place of B. In the appeal to the Privy Council from the decree against him made in a suit brought on the note, the first respondent pleaded that the contract between him and the bank had been induced by fraud, and was, therefore, voidable at his instance. Fraud was, however, not pleaded in the trial Court, nor was any issue directed to it.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff against two defendants for money due by them under their promissory note of 30-6-1917, by which they promised to pay the plaintiff on demand. The makers of the note were the second defendant and her son, the 1st defendant. The 1st defendant admitted execution of the note by him. He and his mother, the 2nd defendant both pleaded that the latter did not execute the note, and that her signature to it was a forgery,

The Sub-Judge found that the note had been made by both the defendants and that there was consideration for it, and made a decree against the defendants. On appeal by the 2nd defendant, the High Court reversed the decree against her and dismissed the suit as against her.

Their Lordships reversed the High Court and restored the Sub-Judge's decree against the 2nd defendant. (Sir John Edge.) BHADRAYYA v. KANAKAMMA. (1924) 22 L. W. 8 = A. I. B. 1925 P.C. 47.

INTEREST ON AMOUNT OF-RATE OF, HIGHER THAN THAT FIXED IN NOTE.

-Creditor's right to -Conditions.

Monies advanced by the respondent to B, the deceased husband of his daughter, were secured by promissory notes, by which A agreed to repay the loans in three years, with interest at 5 per cent. In a suit brought by the respondent, after B's death, to recover the amounts of the notes, he contended that he was entitled to interest at the rate of 8 per cent., and that his interest was not to be limited to 5 per cent., which was the prescribed rate of interest on the promissory notes.

With reference to that contention their Lordships observed as follows :- He, respondent, might maintain that contention by proving either that at the end of the three years, the time for the repayment of the money, he forebore to press for the money, in consideration of an augmented rate of interest, or he might maintain that the contract, of the terms of which the notes are evidence, was superseded by a new contract, which allowed the money to remain for a longer period of time than three years, at an augmented rate of interest. But unless some such case can be proved, a claim of interest at 8 per cent. founded upon a bare promise of the debtor to pay 8 per cent., or upon the fact that the debtor has in account voluntarily debited himself with 8 per cent, in lieu of 5 per cent, could not be maintained in law for want of consideration, amounting merely to a numbum pactum (135). The suit was on a pro-note dated 27th September, 1883. alleged to have been executed by the respondent in favour of the appellant for a sum of Rs. 7,200 repayable with interest at 18 per cent. The question for decision was whether the note was in fact executed by the respondent. The District Judge held that it was ; but the High Court, on appeal, differed with the judgment of the District Judge. and came to the conclusion that the note was not executed by the respondent.

The respondent had come of age shortly before the date of the alleged execution of the suit note; and the suit role was admitted to have been in renewal of a prior note alleged to have been executed by the respondent in favour of a nomince of the appellant for the sum of Rs. 5.000 with interest at 36 per cent. It was found that the respondent was a minor at the time when the prior note was executed, and that only a sum of Rs. 1.500 reached the hands of the respondent in respect of that note.

Held, on the evidence in and the probabilities of the case, affirming the High Court, that the suit note was not executed by the respondent. (Lord Morris.) HURRI-CHURN BOSE r. MONINDRA NATH GHOSE

-Date of note given by plaintiff-Mistake as to-If and when fatal to suit.

The plaintiff sued on a pro-note, alleging that on 5th November, 1907, the defendant, who had borrowed monies of the plaintiff, was found to be indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum for principal and interest; and that he executed the suit note on 7-11-1907 for that sum and another small sum advanced in cash at the time. The evidence addaced by the plaintiff was also to the effect that the note was ext cuted on 7-11-1907. The defendant's evidence, however, completely established his absence from the alleged place of execution of the note on 7-11-1907. Thereupon plaintiff suggested that 7-11-1907 was a mistake and that the note was post-dated and was really signed on either 5 or 6-11-1907.

The trial Judge found that the plaintiffs' version of the transaction was correct, and that the note was executed on the 5th and not on the 7th, and gave the plaintiff a decree The High Court, however, reversed his decree and dismissed the suit on the ground that the finding of the Court below as to the date of the execution of the note constituted fatal variance from the case pleaded and made by the

NEW SOUTH WALES PUBLIC SERVICE SUPER-ANNUATION ACT OF 1903.

8.4-Gratuity to retired public servants-Fixing of-Discretion of Public Service Board as to-Nature of -Arbitrary exercise of-Court's interference with.

The plaintiff was an employee in the public service of the State of New South Wales. He retired after thirty years' service on 16-9-1905. On his retirement, in accordance with the provisions of S. 4 of the Public Service Superannuation Act, 1903, he became "entitled to a gratuity not exceeding one month's pay for each year of service from the date of his permanent employment." The gratuity, in the words of the enactment, was "to be calculated on the average of his salary during the whole term of his employment and to be payable... in the case of ... retirement after the commencement of the Public Service Act, 1902, only in respect of service prior to such commencement."

The average of the plaintiff's salary during the whole term of his employment was found to be £23-10-1 per

On his retirement the Public Service Board awarded him a gratuity or allowance of £454-11-1. In arriving at that sum, the Board reckoned his service up to 23-12-1895, but no longer. The plaintiff claimed to have his service reckoned up to 16-8-02. The Board, instead of awarding a gratuity or allowance calculated on a salary of £23-10-1 per month, allowed him just one penny for each year of service subsequent to 23-12-1895, or seven pence in all.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of £139 19-2, being the amount of additional allowance at the full rate of £23 10.1 for each year of additional service, it was not suggested that any fault was to be found with the manner in which the plaintiff had discharged his duties, and it was admitted that he was entitled to have his service reckoned up to 16-8-1902, and the only question for decision by their Lordships was whether the Public Service Board was entitled to assess the gratuity payable at the sum of seven pence.

Held that, though the Government had a discretion to exercise in the matter, they or rather the Public Service Board, in fact did not exercise any discretion at all as regards the plaintiff's claim in respect of the service subse-quent to 23-12-1895, and that they were not entitled to assess the gratuity payable in respect of service between 23-12-1895 and 16-8-1902 at the sum of seven pence.

Nobody, of course, can dispute that the Government or the Board had a discretion in the matter. But it was not an arbitrary discretion. It was a discretion to be exercised reasonably, fairly and justly. It is quite plain that an illusory award such as this-an award intended to be unreal and unsubstantial, though made under guise of exercising discretion-is at best a colorable performance, and tantamount to a refusal by the Board to exercise the discretion entrusted to them by Parliament. #### NIBANDHA.

-Meaning of.

As regards the Sanskrit word "Nibandha", the original text of Vajnawalcya, which is the foundation of all the other authorities, implies that the subject rendered by the word corrody in Colebrooke's Digest, is sometimes created by royal grant. This, too, is included in Professor Wilson's definition of "Nibandha". That the word in the subsequent glosses on Vajnawalcya's text is used in a wider sense, may be due to the want of precision for which Hindu commentators are remarkable (51). (Sir James Colvile.) point of fact he does not communicate it, you are not to impute to his principals knowledge by reason of the fact that their agent knew something which it was not his interest to disclose, and which he did not disclose.

It would be straining the doctrine of notice beyond all reasonable limits to hold that, where a company wanting payment of a debt from one of its agents asked that payment should be made, and obtained part of their debt without any knowledge whatever of the sources from which the money came, that money should be earmarked with some independent ownership, because the debtor, who was also a servant of the company, committed a fraud in order to discharge his obligations. -Litigation-Agent for purposes of.

The principle of law enacted in S. 229 of the Contract Act and S. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act is in an experial sense applicable to legal proceedings which are usually conducted through an agent, and it would be impossible to conduct such business, and it would lead to grave inconvenience and injustice if it were required to prove afterwards that the client had personal knowledge of the contents of the pleadings, or of some document in suit, or of the general nature of the claim made against him. It is not a mere question of constructive notice or inference of fact, but a rule of law which imputes the knowledge of the agent to the principal, or (in other words) the agency extends to receiving notice on behalf of his principal of whatever is material to be stated in the course of the proceedings (211-2), (Lord Davey.) Registration per se if-Indian Law-English and Irish laws-Distinction.

In England and Ireland no person is affected with notice of any registered deed unless an actual search has been made. This is well established and indispensible law. In England so far as Middlesex is concerned, it was first enunciated by Lord King in Bedford r. Backhouse, and this decision has been accepted without qualification down to the present time (246-7.)

In Yorkshire the statute of 1884 expressly provided that registration should effect notice, but this provision has been subsequently repealed and in the Yorkshire registry also registration does not by itself constitute notice (247).

In Ireland again registration has been held not to create notice (247).

Where the question was whether the effect of the Indian Registration Act, 1877, and the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was to provide that the registration of a deed shall by the mere fact of registration become presumptive notice to all mankind, held: Notice cannot in all cases be imputed from the mere fact that a document is to be found upon the register under the Indian Registration Act. Whether registration is or is not notice in itself depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. In each case it should be determined whether in that individual case the omission to search the register, taken together with the other facts, amounts to such gross negligence as to attract the consequence which results from notice (251-2, 253).

It would not be reasonable to hold that registration was notice to the world of every deed which the register contained. The doctrine must be subject to some modification. There may be circumstances in which omission to search the register would, even under the definition already given, result in notice being obtained, and the circumstances necessary for this purpose may be very slight (252). The mode in which this revenue (Numuk sayer mehal) was collected before the Company's accession to the Dewanny appears to have been, that the zemindars, on whose lands the saltpetre was produced, collected it from the Nooneeahs or manufacturers in kind, receiving from them about one-half of the produce, of which the zemindars retained one-fourth, and delivered the remaining threefourths to the Officers of the Government; and the same mode of collection and division seems to have prevailed after the Company's accession to the Dewanny, except that the collection from the Nooneeahs, and the subsequent distribution of it, was made in money according to the actual current value of the saltpetre (477-8). #### OATHS ACT (X OF 1873).

-S. 8-Oath or solemn affirmation in-Significance of The use of the alternative expression "oath" and "solema affirmation" as a description of the special ritual envisaged in S. 8 of the Oaths Act X of 1873, is intended to indicate that the ritual is to be at least as solemn for the deponent and attended by the same consequences to him as is an ordinary oath or affirmation for and to an ordinary witness. The words were selected primarily to put it beyond the possibility of doubt that the temporal consequences of corrupt falsehood would follow as inevitably for the oot class of witness as for the other; they are descriptive of the nature and result of the ritual; they are in no way connected with its form-a conclusion which is confirmed by the consideration that historically an affirmation technically so called, is merely a substitute for an oath; that the descrip tion includes both "oath" and "affirmation," although, except in the quality of solemnity, these are quite distinct, the one from the other, and that its purpose is revealed by the addition to the word "affirmation" of the adjective which is not in use in connexion with affirmations in the technical sense of the word. S. 8-Oath or solemn affirmation referred to in-Essential part of Invocation or oath or affirmation in the technical sense not an.

Upon a sound consideration of Ss. 8 to 10 of the Oaths Act of 1873, neither an invocation nor an oath or affirmation in the technical sense of these words is in any way an essential part of the so-called oath or solemn affirmation referred to in S. 8 of the Act (312).

OATHS ACT (X OF 1873)-(Confd.)

The "oath or solemn affirmation" referred to in S. 8 and following sections is something quite distinct from the oaths and affirmations referred to in S. 5 of the Act. These are to be in such form as the High Court shall prescribe: S. 7. With regard to the oath or solemn affirmation referred to in S. 8, however, all that is said is that it may be iss any form common amongst or held binding by persons of the race or persuasion to which (the deponent) belongs and not repugnant to justice or decency". That is to say, it may be as infinite alike in form and content as racial custom or the dictates of any religious persuasion may, within the prescribed limits, sanction or require. But from its very nature and essence it can never be in any part of it dependent upon the direction or dictation of the High Court or of any other extra racial or secular administrative authority. It would or might at once lose its essential distinctive sanction if any such outside interference were permitted to have effect. Again there is no suggestion either in S. 8, 9 or 10 that when the separate " oath or solemn affirmation" is permitted the ordinary oath or affirmation, as prescribed, or any part of it, is to be administered as well. The "outh or solemn affirmation" when permitted is a complete substitute for the other. There is in the sections no warrant for the suggestion that any part of a procedure which is only appropriate where it is gone through before any evidence at all is given, and is designed to cover that evidence when given, is to be transferred to a taking of evidence which is solemnized only by its being given, and while it is given in the actual presence and hearing of the deity himself. Indeed, such a requirement, not made by the sections, would in many cases be entirely out of place. When the whole meaning of the procedure is that a statement made by a witness in the corporeal presence and hearing of his God will be true by reason of the fact that it is so made introductory words of invocation, appropriate enough in other circumstances, become entirely unsuitable. For if the deity be removed before the statement is made the words are nugatory; if the statement be made in his presence they are superfluous (312-4). (Lord Blanesburgh.) INDAR PRASAD P. In a suit for partition between two Hindu brothers, the plaintiff, when filing in Court his lists of the joint family property alleged by him to be in the possession of the defendant, offered to give up out of his lists such items as the defendant denied before a named family Deity. The defendant accepted the offer, and the Court, thereupon, appointed a local commissioner, who proceeded to the plaintiff's house, and, in the presence of the plaintiff and the named deity, he recorded the admissions and denials by the defendant of the items in the lists filed by the plaintiff.

Held that the proceedings were tantamount to the administration to the defendant of the special oath or solemn affirmation contemplated by Ss. 8 to 10 of the Oaths Act of 1873, and that, by virtue of the provisions of S. 11 of the Act, the admissions and denials of the defendant so recorded in the presence of the deity were binding on the claimiff.

Held further, that the plaintiff was, under the circumstances, estopped from asserting that the deity was, as a matter of fact, not actually present in the dibba (box) when the defendant's statements were recorded. (Lord Blanesburgh.) INDAR PRASAD v. JAGMOHAN DAS.

Ss. 8 to 13-Law under-Course of development of. The Indian law on the subject of naths was derived from the English law, with some modifications suggested by Indian conditions. Just as in England, so also in India, it was at one time the rule that there could be no evidence without an oath in the strict sense of the word, and only gradually were exceptions grafted by statute upon that rule. Prior to 1840 the privil ge of making an affirmation instead of taking an oath was enjoyed only by Quakers, Moravians and Separatists. By that timz it had been found that the taking of an oath was highly objectionable to Hindus and Mahomedans, and Act V of 1840 was passed for the purpose of prohibiting the administration of oaths to persons belonging to those communities, a form of affirmation being substituted for an oath. With some extension in 1869 the law so remained until the Act VI of 1872 was passed. By that Act it was provided that every witness who objected to take an oath might in-tead make a simple affirmation, and in S. 4 will be found the statutory provision which, prior to 1873, enabled volunteers to make oaths in special cases. Ss. 8 to 13 of the present Oaths Act X of 1873 correspond to and have taken the place of that section, and their Lordships have no doubt that long before that time the Indian view, embodied afresh in the Act, had come to be that which may, briefly, he taken from the words of the Lord Chancellor in Omy-Chund r. Barker (1 Atk. 22): "The next thing is the form of the oath. It is laid down by all writers that the outward act is not essential to the oath. It has been the wisdom of all nations to administer such oaths as are agree-able to the notion of the person taking (315-6.) (Lord Blanesburgh.) INDRA PRASAD », JAGMOHAN DAS

"Administer" is, in the law, a word of wide and not a restricted import. It would be for instance beyond question that an oath is "administered," not only where the English form is adopted, but where, in the presence of the Court, it is "taken" by the witness in the Scottish form (314-6).

OCCUPY.

--- Occupation-Legal and popular senses of.

The word "occupy" is a word of uncertain meaning. Sometimes it denotes legal possession in the technical sense, as when occupation is made the test of ratability; and it is in this sense that it is said in the rating cases that the occupation of premises by a servant, if such occupation is subservient and necessary to the service is the occupation of his master. At other times "occupation" denotes nothing more than physical presence in a place for a substantial period of time, as where a person is said to occupy a seat or pew or where a person who allows his horses or cattle to be in a field or to pass along a highway is said to be the occupier of the field or highway for the purpose of S. 68 of the Railway Clauses Act, 1845. Its precise meaning in any particular statute or document must depend on the purpose for which, and the context in which, it is used.

Held that the word "occupy" in S. 4 (b) of the Vrededrop Stands Act, 1907, was used in the second or more popular sense above described (115-6.) (Viscount Cave). MADRASSA ANJUMAN ISLAMIA OF KHOLWAD v. MUNICIPAL COUNCIL OF JOHANNESBURG.

The plaintiffs sued to recover from the owners of the village of D the amount of the arrears of certain hereditary rights of office, alleging that the appellants were the hereditary Mujoomdars, Paick, and Mehta of a pergunna, and that the owners of the village of D which was situate within the pergunna were bound to pay the hereditary Mujoomdars and their officers a certain sum annually. The defendants alleged that the plaintiffs never performed the duties of their several offices in respect of the village of D and denied the plaintiff's right to recover anything.

Held that, to entitle the plaintiffs to the fees incident to their hereditary offices, it was not essential that the duties of the offices should have been actually performed by them, and that it was enough if they were prepared to discharge them when required (33). In case the Sub-Judge objected to the person named by the appellant, the decree directed that he should himself appoint a competent person, and should thereupon direct the appellant to invest the person appointed as usual and certify it, and that, upon the investiture being certified, the Sub-Judge should place the person so appointed and invested in possession of the Mutt etc.

Error as to.

- Immaterial when.

In a case in which the burden of proof was upon the defendants, the District Judge before the trial made an order that the plaintiff should give his evidence first on all issues. On appeal much stress was laid on that error. It was said that the District Judge was led by it into misconceptions as to the truthfulness of the plaintiff's witnesses, to have thought that the plaintiff must fail if his witnesses were not believed, and to have been provoked by the conduct of the plaintiff's case into believing the wrong side.

A perusal of the judgment of the District Judge showed, however, that when he came to weigh the evidence, his mind was fully alive to the true aspect of the burthen of proof, and that his reasons for giving credence to some witnesses and not to others were judicial and clear, and that his conclusions of fact were not vitiated by any error of law as to the burthen of proof.

Held that the order of the District Judge directing the plaintiff to give his evidence first on all issues worked no injustice to the plaintiff in substance (760-1). (Lord Sumner.) EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO. P. KIRKWOOD.

Evidence adduced to discharge-(Contd.)

In a case in which the onus of proof is on the plaintif, the defendant may leave the plaintiff to prevail by the force of his own case, contending that he is not called upon to answer it unless it is such as if unanswered will dispose of the case. But if, instead of relying upon the weakness of the plaintiff's case, he meets it and undertakes to rebut it by counter-evidence, the court must then look to the sort of evidence produced, and, if it is not such as might have been expected, it may draw therefrom an inference adverse to the defendant (124-5), (Lord Brougham.) Where a plaintiff on whom the burden of proof rests fails to adduce evidence sufficient to discharge it, it is perfectly open to the defendant not to adduce evidence himself, and to demand that the action should be dismissed for want of proof. Where the defendant does not adopt this course, and adduces evidence in his behalf, it is nevertheless not open to the Court to decide adversely to the defendant on inferences drawn from the evidence so adduced by him (4i4). #### Function true of.

Question as to-When material and when not.

Onus is always on a person who asserts a proposition or fact which is not self-evident To assert that a man who is alive was born requires no proof. The onus is not on the person making the assertion because it is self-evident that he had been born. But to assert that he was born on a certain date if the date is material, requires proof; the onus is on the person making the assertion. Now, in conducting any inquiry, the determining tribunal, be it judge or jury. will often find that the onus is sometimes on the side of one contending party, sometimes on the side of the other, or, as it is often expressed, that in certain circumstances the onus shifts. But onus as a determining factor of the whole case can only arise if the tribunal finds the evidenc pro and con so evenly balanced that it can come to no sure conclusion. Then the onus will determine the matter. But if the tribunal, after hearing and weighing the evidence. comes to a determinate conclusion, the onus has nothing to do with it, and need not be further considered (905.6). (Viscount Dunedin.) Acceptance of onus by objector in trial Court-Appellate decision based on evidence and not on question of OWNE.

The suit was brought by the respondents against the ap pellant for a confirmation of their possession of certain mouzahs; and their plaint, which declared that their sail was for that confirmation, also prayed that it might be done after a reversal of a summary proceeding, and after setting aside a fraudulent and fabricated deed of sale set up by the appellant. The deed was executed by a purdanashin lady in favour of the appellant, and the respondents were the heirs of that lady. The plaintiffs did not rest their case before the trial Judge simply upon their title as heirs, but did, by evidence challenge the validity of the deed. They called witnesse to show the circumstances under which the lady lived, and to challenge proof of the consideration having passed which the deed alleged to have been given. The evident might have been weak, but the appellant accepted the owner which that evidence prima facie cast upon him; and he went into his whole case, and gare the evidence that he thought would best support it. of the deeds under the circumstances of the case. From the judgment of the High Court, however, it appeared that the High Court regarded the suit as if it were an action of ejectment brought by the respondents as the heirs of the deceased lady, and held that, on proof by them that they were her heirs, the burden was thrown upon the appellant to shew a better title.

Held, on objection taken that the High Court had wrongly thrown the onus, that though the judges did not quite correctly state the principle of fixing the onus their judgment was substantially right (206). It may be that as the plaintiff was dispossessed by the British Government in 1901 there is a certain onus upon the appellant to justify his dispossession, but this becomes of little materiality when evidence is adduced from which a conclusion in fact may be legitimately drawn.  Onus is always on a person who asserts a proposition or fact which is not self-evident. To assert that a man who is alive was born requires no proof. The onus is not on the person making the assertion because it is self-evident that he had been born. But to assert that he was born on a certain date if the date is material, requires proof; the onus is on the person making the assertion. Now, in conducting any inquiry, the determining tribunal, be it judge or jury, will often find that the onus is sometimes on the side of one contending party, sometimes on the side of the other, or, as it is often expressed, that in certain circumstances the onus shifts. But onus as a determining factor of the whole case can only arise if the tribunal finds the evidence pre and com so evenly balanced that it can come to no sure conclusion. Then the onus will determine the matter. But if the tribunal, after hearing and weighing the evidence, comes to a determinate conclusion, the onus has nothing to do with it. and need not be further considered (69.) Canning's and Outram's proclamations—Effect of —(Contd.)

-Lucknow-Property in-Umao district-Mouzaks in -Letter of 6-7-1863 from Secretary of Chief Commissioner to Officiating Commissioner-Effect of.

By Lord Canning's proclamation of the 15th of March, 1858, all the proprietary rights in the soil of the province were confiscated; and by a proclamation of Sir James Outram it was notified that" for those who have fled from the city"—speaking of the city of Lucknow—"having locked up their houses, that if they would not return within ten days and re-occupy their houses, the property, with their houses, will be confiscated".

The property in respect of which the suit out of which the appeal arose was brought consisted of two portions, the one of certain houses in the city of Lucknow, and the other of a mouzah situate in the district of Umao in the province of Oudh. The properties originally belonged to one M. K. The defendant, one of the heirs of M. K. obtained possession of both properties, and the plaintiff, another heir of M. K., brought the suit claiming his share in them.

Held, having regard to the letter 6-7-1863 from the Secretary of the Chief Commissioner to the Officiating Commissioner, that it was the intention of the Government to abandon altogether the confiscation as regards the houses and property in the city of Lucknow, and to leave the former owners to their rights in the same way as if there had never been any confiscation (82).

Held further, with regard to the mouzah, that the effect of Lord Canning's proclamation of 1858 was to put an end to all previous titles (82-3).

Whatever title, then, either party has to the mouzah must have been acquired by some grant or some proceeding of the Government subsequent to that proclamation (83). (Sir Barnes Peacock.) PRINCE MIRZA JEHAN KUDR BAHA-DOOR v. NAWAB AFSUR BAHU BEGUM.

Extent of.

Intention of Government-Occupiers-Rights of-

In 1858 came the confiscation of Oudh; the result of which was the determination of all existing interests, and taking them into the hands of the Government. But the Government of India did not intend any such injustice as an absolute confiscation of those rights. In certain instances. where talookdars or others had been guilty of great crimes, absolute confiscation did take place; but otherwise it was intended, under certain regulations, to settle and restore the talookdars, and to protect, as far as necessary, by subsettlement, or by some other process, the existing rights of the occupiers. Though in the letter of Lord Canning in 1859, and in the subsequent circulars which were issued from time to time, every intention is shown to do justice to all the parties, and to compel the talookdars to do justice to the occupiers, yet there is nothing to shew any intention to advance beyond what the rights were at the time of the confiscation, and the intention was generally to restore and to protect those rights (62). Proceedings under the Hard Case Circular (Book Circular No. 4 of 1867) cannot be treated as judicial proceedings. It appears from the circular that the talukdars had engaged to take cases of proved hardship into their favourable consideration. Birts-Kinds of-Incidents of-Bishunprit birt-Birt bankati-Origin and incidents of-Distinction.

There exist various kinds of birts, the incidents of each of which differ from those of others. Some are acquired by purchase, and are accordingly called bai birts; some are given from motives of piety to Brahmins, and are designated hishauprit birts. Bishunprit hirts were cessions similar in almost every respect to the hai or purchased hirts, save that these were given to Brahmins for the honour and glory of God (if not for that of the giver) and no consideration was taken. A bishunprit khushast is not a grant for "valuable consideration, " but a mere " grant by favour." There is little or no analogy except in the common use of the word hirt between a gratuitous grant like the bishunprit birt and a jungle clearing grant where the grantee has to incur considerable outlay before he can obtain any return from the land. -Birt Bankati-Under-proprietary right-Dakeya

The question for decision was whether or not the defendants were under-proprietors of the suit village. The defendants held the village under a birt grant created in 1802 by the then owner of the property. The grant, which was called a Pottah, was in the following terms:—

"I have given the village to P by way of birt. He is free to settle himself and others (therein) and to cultivate himself or get it cultivated, year after year; that is to say, he is free to have it cultivated and populated. He should pay the revenue to the Sarkar at the rate prevalent in the taluqa and take the dasaundh at the rate prevalent in the taluqa. I have written this: none should act against this."

For the first year, the rent was fixed at Rs. 4 rising in the course of 5 years to Rs. 36. The clause relating to future rent provided:—" He (meaning the grantee) is to enjoy it free for 5 or 6 years. Thereafter at the rate for bankati prevalent in the taluga."

In 1871 a Settlement Court decreed upholding the birtholder's possession and occupation as an under-proprietor under Circular No. 2 of 1861, upon the condition that the taluqdar could alter the rent in accordance with the practice, before the annexation, the birt-holder being entitled to deduct a dahyak of 10 per cent., and to be paid it if he refused a patta. The evidence in the case showed that for a number of years the defendants had been paying a rent of Rs. 500, less their tenth.

OUDH-LAND TENURES IN-(Contd.)

Held, that the birt-holders, the defendants, were underproprietors, and that the taluquar could not capriciously enhance the rent, which must be at the rate prevalent in the taluqa; and that, in case of dispute, it was wholly within the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court to determine whether the proposed rent was so.

It is alleged that between 1875 and 1879 there was an interruption of the possession of the defendants, and the village was let on a higher rental to other people. Interruption of that character cannot affect or alter the defendants' rights under the pottalt 1802, or the decree once they got back into possession. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) of.

Large tracts of land in the Province of Oudh were lying unreclaimed and uncultivated, and the usual method for large proprietors was to let out the waste lands on favourable terms and security of tenure to tenants to bring them under cultivation. These grants were usually called hirt bankati or bantarashi, the names indicating the purpose for which they were made. The birtia or birt-holder had to cut down the forest, clear the land, build tanks and induct raiyats. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) RAJA MUHAMMAD ABDUL HASSAN KHAN P. LACHMI NARAIN.

-Birt tenure-Nature of-Relations between birtias

Under the nuwahi, birt tenures were presumably carved out of the talookdar's or superior zemindar's estate; they were held under him upon terms varying according to the terms of the particular puttah or contract, and possibly according to the custom of a particular district; they did not necessarily entitle the holders of them to engage directly with the Government for the revenue; when such direct engagements took place malikhana was payable to the talookdar; they were sometimes resumable, and when resumed would fall into the parent estate; and in all cases the relation of superior lord and tenant subsisted between the zemindar and the birtias, a relation which in an unsettled state of society like that of Oudh under the nuwabi, would probably involve more or less of power in the former over the latter, and in dealings between them, give to the zemindar advantages which would not be possessed by a stranger. On the other hand, birts still subsisting are tenures which would entitle their holders to sub-settlement under the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act of 1886 (156-7). (Sir James W. Colvile.) -Birt Zemindars-Heritable and transferable right of, as against taluqdar.

The plaintiff was an Oudh taluqdar, and the defendants were persons who, either by themselves or their predecessors in title, claimed under proprietary rights in villages in his taluqa. Those rights were what were known in Oudh as birt, or birt zemindari rights; and the question for decision was whether persons holding under that tenure had a heritable and transferable right, as against the talundar, in the villages in respect of which the birt had been created.

Held, affirming the judgment below, that as the defendants had shown themselves to come within the benefit of the policy announced in the circular known as the Record of Rights Circular No. 2 of 1861, they acquired, upon the -Under-proprietor- Tenure of-Origin of- Prevalence of before Oudh Rent Act of 1868.

The position of a Qubiz darmiani or "under-proprietor" was fully understood in Oudh before the passing of Act XIX of 1868, which definitely crystallised and gave statutory recognition to his right and status. It had come into being from the circumstances of the times; the exactions of the revenue collectors under the old regime had forced many small proprietors to protect themselves against oppression by engaging with some more powerful neighbour to pay the Government revenue through him, but retaining their right in the property. In 1866 the Indian Legislature recognised their right to obtain a sub-settlement of their property, and the Act of 1868 clearly defined their position. (Mr. Americalia) Lal. Sripat Singh v. Lal. -Under-proprietary right-Proof of.

In the settlement that was made in 1867, the talugdar of the suit estate was clothed with rights which excluded the predecessors of the defendants from claiming to have any greater interest in the village than that of thekadars; in other words, it excluded them from proprietary or underproprietary rights. A dispute having arisen early with regard to their claims, a decree was passed on April 7, 1868, which declared that the rights possessed were thekadari and not pukhtadari rights. From the date of that decree until shortly before the institution of the suit everything that took place was, however, upon the footing that the defendants really possessed the rights which the appellant, the talukdar, said they could not enjoy. The Wajib-ul-arz, the khawat and every public document relating to the estate proceeded upon that footing. Further, in 1887 in proceedings taken against a lady who was described as the wife of the talugdar of the suit estate, the defendant judgment-debtor, the respondents once more claimed they had under-proprietary rights and that claim was allowed. Again when the original settlement ended in 1897 or 1898, another settlement was effected upon the footing that the respondents were underproprietors. Further, following upon the settlement, proceedings were taken on behalf of the Court of Wards, on behalf of the then taluqdar, against those under-proprietors on 2-6-1899, for the purpose of obtaining rent, and they were definitely sued there as pukhtadars.

Held, affirming the Courts below, that the title of the respondents which had been so long recognised could not be overthrown. (Lord Buckmaster.) PRITHIPAL SINGH D. GANESH DIN SINGH. (1923) 50 I.A. 210 N

S. 46 of the said Despatch is perfectly consistent with those which precede, and shows that the rules were to be generally acted upon, though strict obedience to them was not required, until it had been ascertained how far they were applicable to the peculiarities of the Province and the customs of its people. With this view, its application is to be carefully watched by those who administer it, who, after a certain period, are to make a report upon the subject, with any suggestions which may occur to them for amending it

On the whole, their Lordships entertain no doubt that the articles of the Punjab Code generally were in force at the time of the date of these orders, the first of which was made on 25-8-1859, and the last on 23-3-1860 (276). ## OUDH-NAZUL REGISTER-LANDS ENTERED

-Removal subsequent of, from said register - Government order for-Effect of-Right to lands-Owners before confiscation-Right of.

The original plaintiff by his plaint claimed to be entitled to the land or soil occupied by a bazaar in the town of Sandila in Oudh as his ancestral property. He alleged that the residents of the said bazzar lived there as ryots having built houses at their own costs, and that the defendant was one of such residents in occupation of two shops and having without permission built another shop on a piece of fallow. The plaint alleged a custom that if the Zamindar desired the ryot to vacate a house or shop he paid the ryot three-fourths of its estimated price. The plaint accordingly prayed for possession of the land occupied by the defendant subject to the payment of three-fourths of the price of the defendants' shops (other than the one erected without permission) according to the custom. The defence was in substance a denial of the plaintiff's title.

After the mutiny the town of Sandila shared the general confiscation of Oudh territory. Other family property was restored to the plaintiff, but in 1860 the bazaar was entered in the Nazul Register under the mistaken belief that it was previously the property of the King of Oudh. In 1879, however, the Government released the bazzar from the nazul. And the principal question in the appeal was as to the effect of that act of the Government. The contention for the plaintiff was that the Government's letter of the 26th of May 1879 was according to its true construction and when read by the light of previous proceedings a regrant to the zemindar of the land and soil of the bazaar. defendant, on the other hand, contended that the letter was a grant to the occupiers of full proprietary rights in their houses and shops and the land upon which they were constructed and thus turned them from ryots and occupiers into land owners

Held, that the letter of 26th May, 1879, coupled with the consequent removal of the bazaar from the Nazul Register operated as a surrender and regrant by the Government of the bazzar and the shops and houses in it to those persons, who if they had not been confiscated, would be entitled thereto according to their several rights and interests.

The intention of the Government was simply to annul the entry in the Nazul Register and restore the rights which existed when it was erroneously made. And the effect of expunging the entry in the register was a disclaimer by the Government of all title, and a surrender or release of the property to those whom it might concern or (in other words) those who would have been entitled but for the confiscation, according to their several rights and interests, thus following out the policy of the Government at the general settlement of the land in Oudh. -1858-Accumulations and savings from income of estate prior to-Family joint for some purposes.

The plaintiff-appellant, a cousin of the defendant respondent, sued to recover from him the half of a talook in Oods together with the savings, accumulations and investments made by the defendant, or his father, or his ancestors, from the income and proceeds of the talook. The talook in question was one which for a very considerable time had descended to the eldest son, who had taken the whole of it, and had given maintenance to other members of the family. In 1858 a summary settlement of the talook was made with A, the father of the defendant, and in 1860 A received a Sunnud in pursuance of that summary settlement, whereby the talook was granted to him and to his heirs on the principle of primogeniture, and his name was subsequently inserted in the first and second lists of talookdars in the Oudh Estates Act of 1869. The plaintiff. therefore, had no right to the talook. With regard to the savings or accumulations claimed, the plaintiff alleged that the family was joint, and that the onus was therefore on the defendant to prove that there were no savings or accumulations other than that out of the proceeds of the talook, or before 1858 (any savings made from the proceeds of the talook since the summary settlement of 1858 being admitted to belong to the defendant).

Confiscation and re grant of.

Canning's proclamation—Confiscation under, and re-grant to former owner—Extent of new title—Declaration of title according to old sunnuds—Suit for—Maintainability.

The plaintiff was one of the widows of a King of Oudh M. A., who occupied the throne some time before the annexation of Oudh. In the years 1839 and 1840 she had four sunnuds from the king, granting to her a large tract of land within the city of Lucknow, comprising royal palaces, gardens, houses, and shops.

On the suppression of the mutiny in Oudh the well-known proclamation of Lord Canning was issued on the 15th of March, 1858, which had the effect of vesting the property, the subject of the suit (viz., the royal palaces granted to the plaintiff under the sunnuds aforesaid), together with all other landed property in Oudh, in the British Government. Then followed a letter of the 8th of April, 1858, addressed by the Secretary of the Chief Commissioner of Oudh to Mr. George Campbell, who was then the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, in these terms: "Sir, the Chief Commissioner requests that you will consider the Nazul department as under you, and that you will at once order lists to be made out and carefully prepared of all Nazul property. The houses and gardens of all rebels should be prima facie entered in the lists, and can be restored or not, as may hereafter appear expedient. The property of the late royal family will necessarily all come within the lists." From this document, coupled with others, it appeared that the intention of the Government, which was carried into effect, was to put upon the Nazul register all the property which in any sense could be considered property of the royal family, or royal property, including the property, the subject of the

The other documents in the case showed that the Government did not recognise any absolute right in the plaintiff to the suit property but merely allowed her to remain only as occupier for life of the suit premises.

Thereupon the plaintiff instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose claiming a declaration of her absolute title in the suit premises. She alleged that she was absolutely entitled to them under the sunnuds granted to her by her husband, and that the Government had wrongly declared that her interest in them was only one for her life. She further asserted that the cause of action arose when she had previously presented a petition to Government to recognise her absolute title, and the Government refused to act upon it.

Held that the suit was not maintainable (73).

The proclamation of Lord Canning had the effect of vesting the property, the subject of the suit, together with all other landed property in Oudh, in the British Government, and all who claim title to it must claim through the Government. The question then is, what interest, if any, has been granted or allowed to this lady by the Government? Their Lordships do not think it necessary to determine the effect of the construction of the sunnuds under which she formerly held, whether they would, if Oudh had remained under the old dynasty, have conferred upon her a life-interest or an interest in perpetuity. Those rights, whatever they were, were confiscated, and the sole question is, what interest, if any, was regranted to her? Looking at the whole of the proceedings which have been quoted, it appears to their Lordships abundantly clear that no more was granted to her than a permission to occupy the palace for her life. If the acts which she seeks to impugn on the part of the officers of the Government were nullities, it would follow she has no interest at all, but that her property remains in the British Government to which it was confiscated (73.4).

Their Lordships may further observe that this being a declaratory suit, it is clearly not maintainable on the ground that no possible relief could be given (74) (Sir Robert P. Collier.) NAWAB MALKA JAHAN SAHIBA P. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF LUCKNOW.

- Nature of estate in hands of grantee - Joint family

Before the annexation of Oudh two estates belonged to an undivided Hindu family, the members of which were G, U and R, G being the eldest and the manager. The family property was confiscated because G was discovered to be in possession of a quantity of concealed arms. Ultimately, however, the Government made him a grant of village S, which in value was about equal to one-third of the whole family property.

The question for decision was whether the village of S was the self-acquired property of G, or whether it was the joint property of the three bruthers.

G himself, when examined with a view to the preparation of the Khewat of ilaka S, stated that he and his two brothers were "joint in equal shares," and the khewat, which was signed by G, U and R and countersigned by the presiding officer, gave under the head "Shares of Proprietors," and "Names of Zemindars," "G, U & R, all three in equal shares." G never disputed the right and title of his two brothers to a joint share in the property.

Held that it must be inferred that under a family arrangement, which could not be subsequently questioned, the three brothers became jointly entitled as members of an undivided Hindu family to the estate S, although the Government grant was to G alone. (Lord Marnaghten.) KEDAR NATH v. RATAN SINGH.

-Family custom of-Estates subject granted for-Forms of, before and after 1860.

Down to the end of 1859 the Sanads granted for taluqus which by family custom descended to a single heir, but not necessarily to a male heir under the rule of primogeniture were in a form sanctioned by the Government of India. It is a grant to the taluqdar and his heirs, without specifying any particular rule of inheritance. In 1860, however, it was considered desirable to encourage the settlement of talugas so that they should descend to male heirs only under the rule of primogeniture. And a new form of Sanad was approved by Government embodying this rule of descent. It was further thought desirable to communicate the new form of Sanads to taluqdars already holding sanads in the older form to point out its advantages and to offer to such persons the option of taking the new type of Sanad in place of the old. It would appear that a large number of such exchanges were carried out (211-2). (Sir Arthur Wilson,) THAKUR SHEO SINGH v. RANI RAGHUBANS KUNWAR.

-Widow and her heirs-Grant to-Estate taken under -Estate ancestral estate in possession of widow as heir of husband.

An estate, which, at the time of the annexation of Oudh, was in the possession of K, a Hindu widow, to whom it had descended as the surviving widow of her deceased husband, was, in 1858, confiscated by the British Government by virtue of Lord Canning's Proclamation of the 15th of March in that year. The Summary Settlement for 1858-9 was made with K. In the kabuliyat executed on her behalf on that occasion, she was described as the widow of her husband, and she admitted that in virtue of the ancestral right of her husband the regular settlement had been made with her.

A sunnud was afterwards granted to her by Government by which the full proprietary right, title, and possession of the estate was conferred upon her and her heirs for ever, subject to certain immaterial conditions. It was also declared to be another condition of the grant that is the event of her dying intestate, the estate should descend to the nearest male heir, according to the rule of primogeniture, but that she and all her successors should have full power to alienate the estate, either in whole or in part, by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest, or adoption, to whomsoever she should please. It was also further declared that as long as the obligations imposed by the grant should be observed by her and her heirs in good faith, so long would the British Government maintain her and her heirs as proprietor of the estate.

The evidence in the case showed that the Government intended to confer a full proprietary and transferable right in the estate upon A and her male heirs according to the law of primogeniture, and not merely to confer upon her an estate for life, with full power of alienation, and with remainder to the male heirs of her husband, in the event of her dying intestate without having alienated it in her lifetime.

The title of K did not, however, depend entirely upon the Sunnud, for when the Oudh Estates Act of 1869 was passed the name of K was entered in the first of the lists prepared under S. 8 of the Act. It was also entered in the second of the lists mentioned in S. 8 of the Act, the result being that the estate conferred upon K was one of the estate referred to by the Act, and that by virtue of S. 3 of the Act K must be deemed to have acquired by the sunned a permanent heritable and transferable right in the estate is dispute.

Held, on a construction of the sunnud, and on a consider ration of the circumstances set out above, that the Sunni conferred, and was intended to confer, a full proprietary and transferable right in the estate upon K and ber mak heirs according to the law of primogeniture, and not merti to confer upon her an estate for life, with full power of alienation, and with remainder to the male heirs of ho husband, in the event of her dying intestate without haring alienated it in her lifetime (11-2).

If the interest which K, as the widow of her deceased husband, originally took in the property had remained unaltered, she would have had no power of alienation either in her life-time or by will. The estate would have descended to the heirs of her husband, and not to her beits but her interest as widow and that of the reversionary bein were absolutely destroyed and put an end to by the confidence cation under Lord Canning's Proclamation, by which it declared that "the whole proprietary right in the soil is confiscated to the British Government, which will dispose of that right in such manner as to it may seem fitting." disposing of that right by the Sunnud, the Government granted to K and her heirs male, according to the land primogeniture, the full proprietary right and title to the estate (12). ## Impartibility and descent to nearest male heir of.

-Plea of -Proof of -Onus -Quantum - Junior member's rights to share in profits and to demand partition thereof admitted.

The suit was for partition of a taluqulari estate. The defence was that under the terms of the Sanad granting the estate, it was descendible to the nearest male heir, according to the rule of primogeniture, and that the other members were not entitled to a partition of the taluq, though they were entitled to share in the profits, and to demand partition of such shares. It was maintained that the arrangements led to the inference that the family was to have a sole head to it, and that he would take the title of talukdar, and have the management of the property, and though he would be accountable to his brothers, the younger branches, for certain shares of the profits, yet the property was to be held in one hand as an entire estate; and that they could not displace the head of the family from that position.

Held, on the evidence, affirming the Courts below, that there must be some very clear arrangements between the parties to prove the existence of such an estate, that the Sunnud in question was nullified or superseded by family arrangements, under which the respondents acquired separate interests in the taluq, and that they were therefore entitled to a decree for partition (82) (Lord Hobbonse.) #### Joint family estate.

Decree declaring estate in hands of Sanad-holder to be, and to be partible among all members of family-What

In a suit brought against /, the person with whom a summary settlement of an Oudh estate had been made and to whom a Sanad had been granted, by the junior members of the family of J, the Judicial Committee made a decree declaring that the villages in suit comprising the estate were held by / in trust for the joint family of himself and the plaintiffs, and as a joint family estate governed by the rules of the Mitakshara, and directing / to cause the suit villages and the proceeds thereof to be managed and dealt with and applied accordingly.

Held, in a subsequent suit brought by one of the plaintiffs in the prior suit for a partition of the estate and for separate possession of his share thereof, that, on the right construction of the decree of the Privy Council in the prior suit, the estate was ordinary divisible family property in the hands of J, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a partition thereof (60 2).

The contention that the effect of the decision of the Privy Council in the prior suit was that I held the estate as an integral impartible and indivisible estate, subject only to the beneficial interest of the junior members in respect of the profits thereof to the extent of their share is inconsistent with the declaration in that decision that the estate was to be governed by the rules of the Mitakshara, and the direction therein that / should cause and allow the villages and the proceeds thereof to be managed and dealt with and applied "accordingly" i.e., as a joint family estate (61). In a suit for partition of an Oudh Estate, the appellant, the representative of the eldest branch, admitted that, as participation between the members of the family. But he maintained that the arrangements in the family led to this inference, that the family was still to have a sole head to it and that he would take the title of talukdar, and have the management of the property, and though he would be accountable to his brothers, the younger branches, for certain shares of the profits, yet the property was still to be held in one hand as an entire estate; and that they could not displace the head of the family from that position.

Quaere, whether such an estate could legally exist (75). It is extremely difficult to understand what sort of an estate that would represent. It would be a kind of trusteeship, managership, or headship, which could never be displaced or disturbed by the persons having the beneficial possession. Such an estate is entirely foreign to the common Hindu law of Oudh-the Mitakshara law. Nor is any such thing apparently contemplated by the Oudh Estates Act. Assuming that such an estate could legally exist, there must be some very clear arrangements between the parties to prove its existence (75). (Lord Hobbouse.) SHANKAR BAKSH P. HARDEO BAKSH.

-Partition of-Suit for-Decree making junior member sub-proprietor of talukdar in respect of his share-Validity.

In a suit brought against the registered talukdar of a joint family Oudh estate by a junior member of the joint family for a partition of the said estate and for separate possession of plaintiff's share therein, the court below made a decree declaring plaintiff's right to have his share of the estate separately apportioned to him, but directing that the said share should be held by the plaintiff as a sub-proprietor, and subject to the payment of the Government revenue, plus 10 per cent.

Held, that the decree was wrong (61).

One member of a joint family could not rightly be made a sub-proprietor to another member of his share of the family property (61). (Sir Richard Couch.) PIRTHI PAL SINGH D. THAKUR JEWAHIR SINGH.

The order of 1859 of the Government of India set out in the Act I of 1869 declared that every talookdar with whom a summary settlement had been made since the re-occupation of the province had thereby acquired certain rights. To bring any person within the operation of this clause, he must be shown to be one with whom a summary settlement was made between the 1st of April, 1858, and the 10th of October, 1859, as talookdar (232). infant Kajah died on 25-3-1859, and the talooka was on his death resumed by the Government.

Held, that the letter of the Governor-General in Council of the 10th of October, 1859, did not apply to the revenue settlement for which the infant Rajah was permitted to engage and which was resumed by Government after his death and before the letter was written; and that it was not intended by that letter to create in the plaintiff a proprietary right by inheritance in the talook by virtue of a temporary revenue settlement for three years to which she had not been allowed to succeed (243).

The letter of the Governor-General of India in Council of the 10th of October, 1859, ought no doubt to receive a liberal interpretation in order to effectuate the intentions of the Government; but it would be acting in direct opposition to those intentions if the letter were to be read as one which pledged the Government to restore a possession to which they had, in fact, put an end, and to vest in a dispossessed claimant an interest which the settlement itself did not give. Such an interpretation would be contrary both to the letter and spirit of the document, and at variance with every legitimate rule of construction (242-3). RANEE OF CHILLAREE P. -Object and effect of -Talukdar dying between time of engagement and date of order-Heirs of-Rights of.

The letter of the Governor General of India in Council of the 10th of October, 1859, and the recital contained in it shew that the object of the Government was to maintain in possession those talookdars who then were in possession under summary settlements entered into with them after the re-occupation of the province. The talookdars, who were declared to have acquired the right conferred by the letter, were those who had been permitted to engage. Nothing was said as to the heirs of talookdars who had been permitted to engage and who had died between the time of the engagement and the date of the letter. It is necessary to decide whether such heirs, if in possession at the date of the letter, would have been within the spirit or meaning of it. It is clear that the letter, which was a mere act of grace, was not intended to operate as an original grant to such heirs, for, if such were the case, the heir, if a widow, mother, or grandmother, would have taken an estate descendible to her own heirs instead of the estate of a Hindu female heiress descendible to the heirs of the person to whom she succeeded; and thus the estate would have been taken out of the family of the talookdar who had been permitted to engage. The letter could not operate as a grant of an hereditary estate to a deceased talookdar and his heirs. The only way in which it could operate for the benefit of the heirs of a deceased talookdar, who had been permitted to engage in a summary settlement, would be, by its being treated as a retrospective declaration of the effect of the revenue settlement for which he had been permitted to engage. Such a construction cannot be put upon the letter with reference to a talookdar who had died long before the date of the letter; upon whose death the estate had been resumed by Government, and whose heirs had not been permitted by Government to succeed to the talooka even during the continuance of the temporary revenue settlement (242). proprietorship of land in Oudh was that ownership by village communities which had been discovered or established in the North-West Provinces, and that the alleged Talookdary and Zemindary rights were simply a recent usurpation due to the violence and fraud which had marked the last years of the Oudh monarchy; that at all events many of the individual Talookdars and Zamindars had by violence and fraud or the corruption of the Government possessed themselves of other peoples' estates. The old question, moreover, was further mooted whether a Zemindar was really an hereditary landlord or only a Government functionary (126).

universal quo warranto (126).

It was to announce the abandonment of this policy, and to quiet men's titles and possessions, that the Letter was written. It said in substance, we acknowledge the Talookdary tenure-we acknowledge that the tenure does confer an hereditary lordship descendible in fee simple, and we will not allow the existing titles to be disturbed by old dormant claims (126). #### SUCCESSORS IN-MEANING OF.

-Heirs of grantee-Alienees from him-If included. A sanad granted in 1862 to a Mahomedan lasly conferred a taluqdari estate in Oudh upon her and her heirs for ever, subject to the payment of an annual revenue. The sanad provided:--" It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate or of any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, but you and all your successors shall have full power to alienate the estate, either in whole or in part, by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest, or adoption to whomsoever you please . . . . As long as the above obligations are observed by you and your heirs in good faith, so long will the British Government maintain you and your heirs as proprietors of the above-mentioned estate."

Held, over-ruling the appellant's contention, that the word " successors " was an inartistic phrase used for the purpose of expressing that, in the event of there being no alienation, those who succeeded to the estate by virtue of the grant would succeed subject to the conditions and with the same provision as to succession as the person to whom the grant was originally made.

The word "successors" includes the designated parties who would succeed in the event of intestacy, and those designated parties cannot escape the obligations of the grant by 60 I. C. 937 = 40 M. L. J. 577. Widow of granter obtaining title to estate, not by right of inheritance under ranad, but under will of her husband if a " successor".

The British Government granted to N, a Sunni Mahoniedan, a primogeniture sanad conferring upon him the full proprietary right, title and possession of the estate of J. One of the conditions of the grant was stated to be that in the event of the grantee dying intestate or of any of his successors dying intestate, the estate should descend to the nearest male heir, according to the rule of primogeniture, " but you and all your successors shall have full power to alienate the estate either in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest, or adoption to whomsoever you please.

N' made a will by which, after reciting that the Government had asked for a will from him, declared that "after me, my wedded wife shall be the owner and possessor of the moveable and immoveable property, like myself."

Had it not been for N's will the taluqdari property would, on his death, have vested by right of inheritance under the sanad in L, who was the elder of his two brothers.

The question was whether the widow of N was a "successor" of N within the meaning of the sanad; if she was, she had power to make a gift of, or to bequeath the whole taluqa or any part of it to whom she pleased. If she was not a " successor "of N within the meaning of the sanad, she had power to make such a gift as would be recognised as a valid gift by the Mahomedan law applicable to Sunnis of the whole taluqu or of any part of it to whom she pleased.

Held, affirming the opinion of one of the judges of the Court below, that as N'1 widow obtained her title to the talasquari property, not by right of inheritance under the sanad but under the will of her husband, she was not a successor within the meaning of the sanad, and that the widow's right to dispose by gift or by will of the taluqdari property was the right of an owner under the Mahomedan law.

In L. R. 48 L. A. 135 the Board held that the word " successors" in a similar primogeniture sanad, meant those designated persons who would succeed in the event of an intestacy, and not persons who took by sale, gift, or bequest. #### Restoration of confiscated.

-Policy of British Government as regards-Old titles to establish a title to talookdary, or even to malgoozaree -Recognition of.

It must be remembered that the British Government made a great point of recognising old titles, and of restoring as many estates as they could with due regard for security. They felt that the position of the Oudh talookdars was a very peculiar and painful one; that the inducement to take up arms was in many cases very strong; and that when the political necessity of putting down armed revolt had been satisfied, it was both the most prudent course, and the most consistent with a fair consideration of the case, to reinstate those who would enter frankly into the new conditions (171). #### Settlement of.

-Deed of -Heirs and representatives in-As provided by S. 22 of Act I of 1869 in-Meaning and effect of-Estate conveyed.

The holder of an Oudh taluka in list 2 under Act I of 1869 executed a deed of settlement which provided that he himself was for his life to be the proprietor of the estate, that the son of his predeceased eldest son was after his (the talukdar's) death to be proprietor of the estate for his (grandson's) life only, that in the event of the grandson predeceasing him, the talukdar, the mother of that grandson (the eldest son's wife) was to have her son's estate for her life, and that, in the event of both the grandson and his mother predeceasing the talukdar, the latter was to have the absolute proprietary right with the power of making a will, sale or transfer in accordance with the power given by Act I of 1869. The deed further provided that, in the event of the talukdar dying first, and then the grandson, the widow of the eldest son should be owner of the estate for her life. The deed also provided by cl. 7 that, on the deaths of the talukdar, his grandson, and the mother of that grandson, L, the second son of the talukdar, and his beirs and representatives, should succeed to the entire estate, as provided by S. 22 of Act I of 1869, but that L should not interfere in any way with the said ilaga.

The talukdar died first, then the widow of the eldest son, and then the grandson leaving no son.

Held, on a construction of clause 7 of the settlement, that L received an absolute estate in reversion, and that he took the property as self-acquired property, and not ancestral property, and could dispose of it by will.

The words "heirs and representatives" in cl. 7 are to be treated as words of limitation and not of purchase. The words "shall succeed as provided by S. 22 of Act I of 1869" may be regarded either as an idle attempt to derogate from the grant previously made and therefore to be rejected, or, as words of description only, stating the legal incidents which the grantor conceived to belong to the estate which he had granted. His mistake as to the legal consequences does not affect the grant which he has made (273). (Lord Phillimore.) LAL RAM SINGH P. DEPUTY COMMIS-SIONER OF PARTABGARH. (1923) 50 I. A. 265 =

Sub-proprietary right in.

-Condition of -Substantial rent or service to be rendered by sub-proprietor to talukdur if a.

It was argued that there can be no sub-proprietary right unless there be a substantial rent or service to be rendered by the sub-proprietor to the talookdar, and that in this case all that could be paid by the mortgagee after foreclosure would be the Government revenue assessed upon those villages, without giving the talookdar any beneficial interest in the collections of the villages in respect of which the right is claimed. This was not treated as an objection in L.R. 4 I.A. 198. Nor do their Lordships find, either in the letters of Lord Canning or in the rules annexed to Act XX of 1866, anything which necessarily imports that it is essen tial to the enforcement of the rights of one who would otherwise be a subordinate zemindar, that the talookdar should have some pecuniary interest in the sub-tenure (13-4). -Preserence of latter to former-Custom of-Proof of-Another branch of family holding under same sanad-Single instance of preference in-Insufficiency of.

An Oudh taluqa was held under a sanad which provided that, in the event of the grantee dying intestate or of any of his successors dying intestate, the estate was to descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture. On the death of the taluqdar leaving a widow but no male issue, the question arose whether there was a custom in the family entitling the widow to succeed in preference to the nearest male heir of the deceased. One instance was proved in which the widow of another of the grantees under the same sanad was allowed to take possession of his estate to the exclusion of his male heirs.

claim. But the plaintiffs do not shew that there has been any such conduct beyond the fact that they have been left in possession of the property during the whole time of the troubles in Oudh, and down to the present time. The talookdar has paid to the Government the revenue for the whole talook, and the plaintiffs have paid the talookdar that share of the revenue which would be payable for the villages that they held. Their Lordships are of opinion that the mere fact of possession, which is consistent with an intention to give maintenance as well as proprietorship, does not establish any case against the talookdar obliging him to make the plaintiffs proprietors of that portion of his talook. -B, the talukdar of an Oudh estate, was entered in List II of the Oudh Estates Act, namely, as one whose estates according to the custom of the family on and before 13-2-1856, ordinarily devolved on a single heir. His title was either conferred or recognised by the Mahomedan Government before the annexation. After that event both summary settlements were made with him, and the sunnud was granted to him. He remained legal owner until his death in 1878, when his legal title passed to the plaintiff, B's brother. At that time K, the uncle of B and the plaintiff, was managing the estates and receiving the rents. the death of B, plaintiff instituted a suit to recover possession of the estate from K'.

A's defence was that he and his brother T were really instrumental in prevailing upon the authorities to recognise B and to take a kabuliat from him; but he alleged that the real benefit was given to T and himself, who became joint proprietors, B being in effect a benamidar for them. As for the settlements, K contended that the first was the consequence of B's position as kabuliatdar at the annexation, and that the second and the sunned were arranged by T with the British Officers, and that whatever legal interests were passed to B were clothed with a trust for his two uncles.

Held, on the evidence over-ruling the defendant's contention, that B was the apparent and the real owner of the talook, and was not a trustee for his uncles K and T (165). (Lord Hobhouse.) MUHAMMAD IMAM ALI KHAN v. SARDAR HUSAIN KHAN. (1898) 25 I A. 161= 26 C. 81 = 2 C. W. N. 737 = 7 Sar. 432.

-At the time of the first settlement of Oudh in 1859 a lady applied as malik for settlement of the villages in suit. Her claim was opposed by a Nawab, who was in possession, on the ground that he was entitled to remain in possession until certain monies which he had disbursed on her account, were paid off. That objection was upheld and the settlement was made with the Nawab "in accordance with possession", and the lady was directed to proceed by a separate application to get the property released by payment of the money due by her. In 1867, when the regular Settlement of the Province was in progress the lady's application for settlement of villages with her was again resisted by the Nawab on the ground that they were included in the Sanad granted by Government to him, and dismissed on the 31st October, 1868. In a suit instituted in 1905 to recover possession of a half share in the villages on the ground that the proceedings in 1859 constituted the Nawab a trustee on behalf of the lady, held that the correlative obligation that lay on the Nawab to release the property on payment of the money did neither create a trust nor constitute the Nawab a trustee for the lady; that when she applied for the fact that the case was not decided by the Court of regular settlement, an adverse title was distinctly set up by the Nawab, and from the 31st October 1868, the date of the dismissal of her application, the Nawab's possession was adverse to the lady; and that the suit was therefore clearly barred. HINDU JOINT FAMILY-SUNUD HOLDER MEMBER OF-TRUSTEE FOR OTHER MEMBERS OF FAMILY.

Ancestral estate subject of settlement-Property granted for services rendered during muliny-Property acquired with profits of estate-No distinction between

In a case in which it was found that it was the intention of the defendant that the villages included in the summary settlement made with him and the sunned granted to him should be held by him in trust for the joint family consisting of himself, the appellant, and one P, and as a joint family estate subject to the law of the Mithakshara, held that there were no grounds for making any distinction as regards the rights of the parties between the ancestral villages which were the subject of the summary settlement, and the villages which were granted by the sunnud for services during the mutiny, or those which were acquired from the profits of the estate (166 7).

It appears from the evidence, as well as from the finding of the Court below, that the appellant and P were just as loyal as the defendant, and rendered loyal services to Government equally as valuable as those which were resdered by him. Those loyal acts, if not in the remembrance of the Government or of its officers, must have been known by the defendant, and it must also have been known to him that the loyal services which he rendered to the Government were rendered by means of the then joint family property, and that in accepting the reward from Govern ment he acted as the representative of the family. It may therefore reasonably be presumed that the knowledge of these facts induced him to treat the reward villages granted by the sunnud in the same manner as the ancestral village which were the subject of the summary settlement, and accordingly it appears that from the time of the sanned to the time of the quarrel in 1865, the reward villages, like al the others, were treated as part of the joint family estate. and were subject to the common management (167-8). -Effect of Act I of 1869 upon-Ss. 3, 11 and 15. In a suit commenced long before the passing of Act I of 1869, the question was whether the respondent had in any and what manner agreed or become bound to hold the villages comprised in the summary settlement or sunnel or any and what part thereof, or of the rents and profits thereof, in trust for the appellant and P, or either and which of them. The evidence in the case afforded sufficient grounds for presuming that, up to 1865, it was the intention of the respondent that the villages included in the summar settlement and sunnud should be held by him in trust for the joint family, and as a joint family estate subject to the law of the Mitakshara. And if judgment had been given before the passing of the Act, it ought to have been hed that the respondent was bound by the trust to be presumed as abovementioned. The question was whether, in view of fact that the core was instance until after the passing of the Act. the Act (I of 1869) operated so as to change the relative conditions of the parties, and to put an end to the trust upon which the respondent had previously held the estate.

Held, that it did not (164).

The defendant (respondent), as well as the villages Nos. 1 and 2 in the detail, fall within the category of S. 3 of the Act.

That section, it should be observed, does not state that the talookdar shall be deemed to have, but that he shall be deemed to have acquired by the summary settlement and sunnud a permanent heritable and transferable right in the The right so acquired was subject to the provisions of Ss. 11 and 15 of the Act, by the latter of which it was enacted that if any calookdar should theretofore have transferred or should thereafter transfer the whole or any portion of his estate to a person not being a taleokdar or grantee, and if such person would not have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to the estate if the transferor had died without having made the transfer and intestate, the transfer of and succession to the property so transferred should be regulated by the rules which would have governed the transfer of such property if the transferee had bought the same from a person not being a taloo'dar (165),

If, therefore, the defendant had, before the passing of Act I of 1869, and at any time after the date of the summary settlement and sunnud, and after he had thereby acquired the right which, according to the provisions of the 3rd section, he must be deemed to have acquired thereby, expressly declared that he held and would hold the estate in trust for the joint family as joint family estate governed by the rules of the Mitakshara, there can be no doubt that the estate would have been subject to the trust so declared, and that it would not have been converted by Act I of 1869 into an estate held by the defendant for his own sole use and benefit discharged from the trust. There can be no difference in this respect between an express trust and a trust implied or presumed from a fair and reasonable interpretation of the acts and declarations of the defendant (165-6). - Evidence

The question for decision was whether the respondent had in any and what manner agreed or become bound to hold the villages comprised in the summary settlement or sunnud, or any and what part thereof, or of the rents and profits thereof, in trust for the appellant and P, or either and which of them.

Upto the time of Lord Canning's proclamation, the whole of the villages mentioned in the summary settlement were the joint family property of the appellant, the respondent, and P. and they were either ancestral or purchased with the proceeds of ancestral estate. The evidence adduced upon the trial fully warranted the conclusion that the actual relation of the appellant, the respondent, and P remained that of a joint and undivided Hindu family from the date of Lord Canning's Proclamation up to the quarrel and removal of the respondent to Kaswara in 1865. The evidence also proved that during that period there had been a joint interest in, and common management of, the property.

Held, that the facts so found, coupled with the statement of the respondent in his application for a summary settlement to the effect that the appellant was his partner, and with his deposition of the 8th of July, 1859, in which he stated that the custom prevailing in his family was that if his courins, meaning the appellant and P, who were his partners, should claim, they could get their shares divided, afforded sufficient grounds to justify their Lordships in presuming that, up to the time of the quarrel in 1865, it was the intention of the respondent that the villages included in the sammary settlement and sunnud should be held by him in trust for the joint family, and as a joint family estate sabject to the law of the Mithakshara (163-4). -In September 1858, when the three-year summary settlement was in progress, K applied to have the settlement of a talooka made with him. He stated that the estate was ancestral family property in which he was a co-sharer. The first summary settlement on the annexation of the province had been made, he said, with his co-sharers, M and S, but they had absconded, fearing that they would be called upon to pay what they had collected in excess during the mutiny, He offered to pay what was due to Government in respect of the whole estate. At the same time, he declared that if his co sharers re-appeared and paid up what he might have paid to Government they should get their shares. The settlement officer entered the name of K alone as malguzar, and sent the papers to the head office in Lucknow for confirmation. The Special Commissioner of Revenue, to whom the papers went in the first instance, put up a note in these words: "Correct but I would have a door open to admit the other sharers if they explain their conduct by and by." The Chief Commissioner, to whom the papers then went, wrote against the Special Commissioner's note:

The man agrees to this." The papers were then returned to the settlement officer, who accordingly retained the name of K, recording in the column of the summary settlement statement headed "Abstract of the case", an abstract in English of K"s statement, which was as follows:-" I am entitled to half and those two"-that is, M and S-"to the . . I want the settlement of the whole other half. talooka. When the sharers come back, if they pay up what they owe me, I will willingly give up their share." Following the summary settlement the sannad was granted to K. and his name was entered in Lists I and II referred to in the Oudh Estates Act of 1869. S did return subsequently, and neither K, nor his daughter and heiress who succeeded him, ever disputed the right of S to share in the estate. On the other hand, there was evidence to show that K did not consider himself to be absolute owner to the exclusion of S.

Held, on the above facts, reversing the judgments below, that in the events which happened K became and was, as to one-fourth of the estates comprised in the sanad granted to him, trustee for S, and that the appellants, as representatives of S, were entitled to recover one-fourth of those estates.

If K became a trustee for S on his return, the fact that the sanad was granted to K alone would not deprive S of his rights. The grantee under a sanad of that description takes subject to trusts which have been validly created. (Lard Macnaghten.) HASAN JAFAR v. MUHAMMAD ASKARI. (1899) 26 I. A. 229 = 26 C. 879 =

POSSIBILITY OF HIS BEING A.

 A person who has been registered as a talukdar under Act I of 1869 and has thereby acquired a talukdari right in the whole property may, nevertheless, have made himself a trustee of a portion of the beneficial interest in lands comprised within the taluk for another and be liable to account accordingly (196).

As the Courts below had decided the case merely upon the ground that the defendant (the registered talukdar) was protected by the sunnud, without adverting to S. 15 of Act I of 1869, or inquiring whether, notwithstanding the summary settlement, the sunnud and the statute, the defendant had in any and what manner agreed or become bound to hold the villages comprised in the settlement and the sunnud, or any and what part thereof, or the rents and profits thereof, or any and what part thereof, in trust for the appellant and another, or either and which of them, their Lordships remanded the case for the trial of that issue. #### WIDOW.

Trustee for adopted son-Evidence.

The defendant was the widow of one B, who died without issue on 12-11-1857. The plaintiff claimed to be the adopted son of B, the allegation being that he was adopted by the defendant on 25-4-1858 in pursuance of a direction to that effect given to her by her husband, B. In May 1858 a summary settlement of the suit estate was made with the defendant, and a sunnud was granted to her. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had constituted herself a trustee on his behalf of the suit estate. The question was whether there was evidence to show that the defendant had declared herself or had agreed to be a trustee on behalf of the

Two letters were relied upon by the plaintiff in support of his case that the defendant had so declared herself or had so agreed. One letter, which was written by the defendant to the plaintiff, contained a promise to put him in posses sion of the estate on his becoming of age. The second letter, addressed to B, between whose daughter and plaintiff a marriage was arrranged, was to the same effect as the letter addressed to the plaintiff.

Held that those letters, if proved, might, coupled with surrounding circumstances, constitute sufficient evidence on which the Court would be justified in holding that the defendant had declared herself or had agreed to be a trustee on behalf of the plaintiff (652). Trustee for purposes of husband's will - Evidente. N, an Oudh talookdar, left a will which provided for the succession to the talook of each of his succeeding wives after the death of her prior wife, and, after the death of all his five wives, for the succession of one S.

On the death of N, a summary settlement was made with R, one of his widows, on 2-12-1858, and a sunned was granted to her on 15-3-1861, followed by the entry of her name on the first and third lists prepared under S, 8 of Act I of 1869. In a suit by the appellant, another widow of N the question was whether, notwithstanding that the legal title was thereby conferred upon R, she had so conducted herself that she must be deemed in equity to be bound to hold the estate in trust for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of her husband's will.

The evidence showed that R had all along, certainly from April, 1856, to the time when she obtained the sunnud, held herself out as claiming the estate under the terms of be husband's will. Without the will R and the appellant would have been ordinary Hindu widows, and R would not have been in a position to claim the sole benefit of the two settlements and of the sunnud which were granted to ber-Further two important documents to which R was a party were inexplicable except on the supposition that she was abiding by the will, which, on other occasions, she expressly set up and successfully used as a defence to her possession Held that R had by her conduct constituted herself in equity a trustee for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of her husband's will, and that the appellant was entitled to succeed to the talook after the death of R (52.3) (Sir Robert P. Where in Oudh sub-proprietary rights in a village were held by the relatives of a Talukdar, who held superior proprietary rights in it, under the provision for maintenance in accordance with one of the Rules of Practice, framed by the British Indian Association with regard to suits instituted and decrees passed therein, dated, 23rd September 1867, triz., "This class will remain in possession of what they actually have at annexation or rent-fee "during their lifetime but subject to payment in the second generation of 25 per cent. to the Talukdar, and in the third 50 per cent. and will not have transferable rights. If such persons pay the Government Revenue, plus 10 per cent. to the Talukdar, they will have heritable rights in addition.

Held, that the bulk sum out of which the percentages were to be struck was the assumed rental, of which 50 per cent, was the Government Revenue.

Held also, that it was not within the province of a Rent Court to determine whether maintenance was or was not payable; and consequently that certain payments made on account of maintenance to the respondent by the Court of Wards which represented the appellant during his minority, could not be opened up by the appellant in suit brought in a Rent Court by him after he attained his majority. The question was whether the appellants were estopped from denying the 1st respondent's right to hold the suit villages for life as an under-proprietor without power of alienation.

The 1st respondent was the second wife of one B. The sole basis of title she could found upon was a compromise of the year 1878. Under that compromise, S, the then wife of B, was the only person entitled to possession of the suit property as an under-proprietor during her lifetime without the power of transfer and sale. On the death of S her rights came to an end and the 1st respondent, the subsequently married wife of B, had no rights under the compromise. On the death of S, and after the marriage of the 1st respondent, the latter took possession of the property and remained in possession for a period of 8 years. She obtained a mutation of names, and paid rent to the talukdar, that is, the Court of Wards in charge of the appellant's estate, the Court of Wards taking the rent from the 1st respondent evidently on the mistaken assumption that she, another wife of B, was possessing the property on the same title as her predecessor.

Held that the appellants were not, on discovering the recovering possession of the property on the ground that the 1st respondent had no title to the same.

The taking of a rent each year, might, and did, bar by estoppel the Court of Wards from any claim for mesne profits during the particular year or years for which such rent was received. It estopped the Court of Wards from main taining that the 1st respondent possessed the property with a liability to account or possess on any other or further terms than on payment of the rent made and taken. But there estoppel stops and it can never be reared up into the creation of a pukhtadari right of a proprietary, heritable and transferable character, nor can it ever create a right of possession of the property for life under the same terms as some other person had previously possessed it upon. The suit was to set aside an adoption of the second defendant by the 1st, a Hindu widow, and also to set aside a decree given under S, 15 of C. P. C. of 1859, declaratory of the adoption, obtained by the defendants. The plaint alleged that the minor, on whose behalf the suit was brought was an Oudh talookdar, that at the time of the said decree, the widow, the first defendant, was a sub-proprietor of the plaintiff's talook, and liable to him for the Government revenue demand plus a certain percentage; and that the effect of the adoption and decree, so long as they were not set aside, was to put the so-called adopted son in the place of the widow as sub-proprietor, and thus to thrust upon the talookdar, in a method contrary to law, an obnoxious subproprietor. The plaintiff further stated that the minor talookdar was entitled in reversion to the sub-proprietary estate held by the defendant No. 1, and the effect of the so-called adoption and of the ducree was illegally to injure and postpone that reversion.

Held, reversing the Courts below, that as talookdar the plaintiff had no right to have the alleged adoption and declaratory decree set aside as against him (21). (Sir Robert P. Collier.) RANI ANUND KOER v. COURT OF WARDS. (1880) 8 I. A. 14 - 6 C. 764 (771)=

The plaintiffs claim that, if they are not proprietors they have at all events a sub-proprietary right; and there are cases in which it would be quite just and proper to allow one who comes to claim recovery of villages, or the right to a settlement in villages, on the ground of a proprietary right, to maintain upon the same facts that he is in effect a sub-proprietary right is entirely irrelevant to the relief claimed in this suit, which is for a declaration of right on which to found a mutation of names in order that effect may be given to the dealings with the estate by the plaintiffs (56-7). Sub-Settlement of sub-proprietary right, in—Right to—Mortgagee by conditional sale before confiscation— Right of—Birt Zemindari interest—Mortgage of—Malikana—Talockdar's right to, on Sub-Settlement.

On 4—3—1856 the then Rajah of an Oudh talook borrowed from the plaintiff a sum of money, and as a security for that sum, executed, a few weeks after the first annexation of Oudh, a mortgage by way of conditional sale, by which he made a conditional sale to the plaintiff of four villages, which were part of the said talook, with all the four boundaries, and birt Zemindary rights for the period of 4 years, commencing from 4—3—1856, and ending on 4—3—1860. The deed of mortgage went on to say: "The abovenamed creditor is allowed to take possession of the aforesaid villages, to pay the Government revenue, and to appropriate the surplus profits to his use in lieu of interest. Neither will I have any claim to profits, nor will the creditor have any claim to interest. I shall be entitled to get back the deed when I pay the money at the stipulated period."

At the summary settlement which the British Government proceeded to make upon the first annexation of the province, the plaintiff applied to have the settlement of those four villages made directly with him. That settlement was not completed until 4-6-1857; and, when made, was made to endure only for the time during which the plaintiff would be in possession of the villages strictly in the character of mortgagee, that is, only up to the time fixed for the redemption of the mortgage. Then came the Mutiny and Lord Canning's Proclamation of 15-3-1858. Early in 1859, the Government, having apparently retained during the intermediate period the talooka in question under some kind of attachment, finally determined to grant it to the respondent. He was admitted to engage for the revenue on 21-1-1859, and the settlement was completed on 25-5-1859. The plaintiff, who was in actual possession of the villages as mortgagee, was dispossessed on 31-1-1859, when, in anticipation of the final settlement, the respondent was put in possession. plaintiff's attempts to assert his rights and to recover possession were unsuccessful, and he was directed to urge his

Accordingly when the settlement was in progress, the plaintiff filed the suit out of which the appeal arose claiming to be entitled to a sub-settlement of a sub-proprietary right in the four villages.

Held, reversing the Court below, that the grant by the mortgage deed of the birt Zemindary interest should be treated as the conveyance of a Sub-Zemindary interest; that the 4 villages were at the time of the settlement properly treated as still in the talooka in question settled with the respondent; and that the plaintiff's claim to a subsettlement was valid, but that it was to be without prejudice to the right, if any, of the respondent to malikana at a rate not less than 10 per cent. (14-5).

Quare whether if the interest created were not in the strict sense of the term a sub-proprietary interest, the case in L. R. 4 I. A. 198 would not have justified a sub-settlement of it (14). (Sir James W. Colvile.) GOURI SHUNKER v. THE MAHARAJAH OF BULRAMPORE.

OUDH—REGISTRATION RULES OF 1862.

Registration of gift deed in accordance with-Validity-Attendance of Registrar at grantor's house.

The question was as to the legality of the registration of a deed of gift. The objection taken to the instrument was that it was not presented at the office of the Registrar, bet that the Registrar was sent for to the executant's residence where the deed was executed and registered. The executant was a purdanasheen; and the mode in which registration was effected was in this manner: She sent for the pargana registrar, and he attended at her house. Her house was near the office of the pargana registrar, and actually within the very village which was the subject of the gift. The registrar having attended her, and having the deed acknowledged in his presence, word for word, by the granting party and having examined it, it was handed to him for registration. The sole objection to that registration was that the grantor did not go to the office of the pargana registrar, but that he came to her, and received the deed and copy at her house.

Held that the registration was effective, complete and full, and that the deed ought not to be disturbed on that account.

The registration, in fact, took place at the office of the pargana registrar, though the officer attended to receive the deed, to receive its acknowledgment, and to compare the deed with the copy. He brought it all to his own office, and the registration is, in fact, the recording of that copy in the office of the pargana registrar, all the other requisites provided by the rule having been otherwise compiled with (22). He was admitted to engage for the revenue on 21—1—1859, and the settlement was completed on 25—5—1859. The plaintiff, who was in actual possession of the villages as mortgagee, was dispossessed on 31—1—1859, when, in anticipation of the final settlement, the respondent was put in possession. The plaintiff's attempts to assert his rights and to recover possession were unsuccessful, and he was directed to urge his claims at the regular settlement to be thereafter made.

her death the father of the original appellant, and after him the appellant, had been registered as the persons responsible for the revenue assessed, from time to time on the village; and so far, the ostensible proprietors of it. But it was insisted that that was merely an arrangement for fiscal purposes, and that notwithstanding the registration in the name of one member of the family on behalf of the others, both branches continued jointly to possess the village and to enjoy the revenues of it.

Held that a suit so framed, though tried by the Revenue authorities, and in the course of proceedings for effecting a settlement of the public revenue, did not, in the Province of Oude, merely determine who was to be Lumbardar, or the person entitled to engage for the payment of revenue, leaving the party excluded a remedy in the Civil Courts, but that such a suit involved a final adjudication on the question of proprietary right (404). In order to entitle a person to sub-settlement it is necessary that he should prove that he, or some person under whom he claims, had within the prescribed period held the lands as an under-proprietor under the taluquar. It is not sufficient for the claimant to show that he had been a proprletor of the land (of which a sub-settlement is sought) by a title adverse to the taluqdar, and that although he might have lost his right to engage for the Government revenue, under the peculiar laws that had prevailed, it is to be presumed that, having once had the better title to the land, he has nevertheless a right to a sub-settlement still in respect of that land. Sections 1 & 24 of the Chief Commissioner's Circular Order of 29th Jannuary 1861 enact in effect that if a birteeah is out of possession in the year 1855, his claim cannot be recognised. They are not, in the technical sense, enactments of limitation, though their effect is in some respects the same, viz., to prevent the owner of a birt tenure being heard to support his claim; and they appear to be treated as enactments of limitation by the authorities in Oudh, and to some extent by the Legislature itself (20).

Whether the provision in the circular Order referred to be considered a provision of limitation or not, it was in effect repealed by Act XVI of 1865 and Act XIII of 1866, and the suit of a birteeah became thereupon cognizable, notwithstanding that he may not have been in possession in 1855 (20-1). The words treated as words of limitation in S, 24 of the Chief Commissioner's Circular Order of 29th January, 1861 apply to all birt tenures. If a shankallap be a birt tenure they apply to it; if it be not a birt tenure they do not apply to it, and it follows that there is no term of limitation in the regulation applicable to shankallaps (20).

The ruling referred to by the Judicial Commissioner draws a distinction in reference to the application of the term of limitation (as it is called) to birt tenures, and to tenures in the nature of shankallap, which are to some extent different from birt tenures, and are assumed to be held at the option of the talookdar; but their Lordships find no such distinction in the Circular of 1861 (20), Sir Robert Collier). Under the Oudh Estates Act the succession to collaterals opens on the death of the widow just as under the ordinary Hindu law. During her lifetime, the presumptive reversioner has, therefore, no more than an expectancy, and has no interest in the property of the last male owner which he is competent to transfer or bind. The position is not aftered by the fact that the next reversioner has, prior to the date of a transfer of his interest, obtained a decree declaring that a will, alleged by the widows of the last male owner to be the will of their deceased husband and to have authorised them to adopt, was void and invalid, and that the next reversioner was entitled to succeed to the properties of the last male owner on the death of his last surviving widow.

Where, after obtaining a decree of the Deputy Commissioner to the effect above stated and before the death of the last surviving widow, the presumptive reversioner purported to sell half the estate, declaring by the sale deed that when he succeeded he would put the vendee in proprietary possession, held that the transfer was inoperative and ineffectual to pass title to the property. -Estate within meaning of -Kabuliyat excented after 10th October, 1859-Effect.

Held that the fact that the Kabuliyat was not executed until after 10th October, 1859, did not deprive a taluqa of the character of an "estate" within the meaning of S. 2 of Act I of 1869 (179).

A summary settlement might be made within the timelimit, and yet the formal documents connected therewith might not, owing to causes beyond the control of the person with whom the settlement is made, be executed until later, The law must be absolutely explicit that non-execution within the time is fatal to the right which it expressly gives before it can be so construed. Under S. 3 of the Act the right the talukdar is declared to have acquired comes into existence with the settlement, the rest of the clause merely describes the properties with respect to which it takes effect (179). -Estate within meaning of-Villages settled at summary settlement on grantee whose name entered as owner in Lists 1 and 2 if an.

The nucleus of the taluqa in dispute, was formed by one S. He owned nine villages, but the number increased to 16 in the hands of his son and successor, who lived about the close of the 18th century. In 1856, when the British first occupied the Kingdom of Oudh, the taluqa included 21 villages, and was held by A. On the outbreak of the muttiny A disappeared, and did not make his appearance on Lord Canning's Proclamation issued in March, 1858. The British authorities accordingly proceeded to make a settlement of his confiscated villages with third parties. But sometime in July, 1859, A appeared before the authorities, and on 5-10-1859, an order was passed on his application, sanctioning the summary settlement with him of the remaining nine villages which had not been finally settled with others. The kabuliyat, however, was not signed by him until the 13th of that month, villages. He was thus in possession of some villages when Act I of 1869 was passed into law. Later on he acquired by purchase several other properties. A's name was entered in the Lists prepared under the statutory provisions of S. 8 of the Act.

Held that the properties settled with A in 1859, together with those of which he obtained possession under decrees passed in his favour in the course of the regular settlement, constituted an "estate" within the meaning of Act I of 1869, and were consequently impartible (179). - Will under-Succession-Gavernment's inquiry as to talukdar's wishes as to-Statement by talukdar in reply to-Will if a.

That which was not a will in the ordinary sense of the word, might, in their Lordships' opinion, have amounted to a will within the definition of Act I of 1869. By S. 2 of that Act it is declared that the word "will" means "the legal declaration of the intention of the testator with respect to his property affected by this Act, which he desires to be carried into effect after his death." (276).

One of the documents, dated 14-2-1860, executed by an Oudh talookdar with respect to his property ran as follows:—

"I, Rajah G. S, Talookdar of Jubroulee, etc., do hereby declare that the British Governmen' has conferred upon me. in perpetuity, the proprietary right in the estate of Jubroulee, etc, and has asked for a statement regarding the custom of primogeniture, with a view that the estate may not be divided. In my family the custom for generations past has been that the eldest member of the family has been considered by all the sharers as the head, to whom the other sharers in the family have been subject, but at the same time have possessed their right to share in the estate. Any sharer wishing to have his share separated on any account, can do so under the custom of the family. eldest member of the family, who is regarded as the chief, cannot, according to the custom of the family, transfer the estate to another, without consulting all the sharers in the family. I therefore wish that the custom which has hitherto prevailed in my family may be adhered to, and not that of a single member succeeding to the whole estate."

The other documents were similar in effect, though not in the identical terms.

Held, that the document of 14—2—1860, and the other documents, which were very similar, did declare the intention and wishes of G. SECTION 2-(Contd.)

On the 6th of April 1860, F, an Oudh talukdar, whose name was entered in list 2 prepared under the Act I of 1869, made a statement in reply to inquiries by the Government under Circular Orders regarding the succession of talookdars. It was as follows :- 'I am talookdar of T. Whereas the Government has been pleased to confer upon me the proprietary rights in this estate, to be enjoyed from generation to generation, I do hereby request that after my death my estate may be maintained intact and without partition according to Raj Gaddi custom, and that, owing to my not having a male issue, Z, my daughter, shall be considered entitled to succession and inheritance. But as I have taken T from my brother M, and have commenced to bring him up and educate him as my son, if he finishes his education during my lifetime and is married to Z, he shall after me succeed to my estate as my adopted son." F made other replies about the same, the talook being in three districts, in which no reference was made to his daughter or T, and it was contended that the reply of the 6th of April was not intended more than the others to be testamentary; bet in a letter from F to the Deputy Commissioner, dated 20-6-1877, in reply to questions that had been asked, he said in reply to the fourth question, which was to give the name and title of any boy who might be his successor, whether his begotten or adopted son, "The reply to this question refers to the will which has been submitted to the Lucknow district through the tahsil of Kursi on the 6th of April. 1860.1

Held, that the document of the 6th of April, 1860, was a will within the definition in S. 2 of Act I of 1869 (85.6).

revenue settlement for the province of Oudh. The object of the suit was to establish the alleged right of the plaintiff to the proprietorship of talooka C. The plaint was filed on the 26th of January, 1867.

The plaintiff claimed as grandmother and heiress to a deceased infant Rajah, with whom a summary and temporary settlement of the talooka had been made. It appeared, however, that the talooka had been, after the death of the infant Rajah, and before the order of the Government of India of the 10th of October, 1859, set out in the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, resumed by the Government.

Held, that the case of the appellant did not fall within tither the words or the spirit of the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869 (243).

Their Lordships are of opinion that Act I of 1869 cannot apply to this case, in which the suit was commenced in 1867, and finally decided by 'he Courts in Oudh in 1868; but even if the Act could apply by retrospective operation it would not vest a right in the plaintiff, for the word "talook-dar" in the 3rd section of the Act, was defined to mean "a person whose name is entered in the first of the lists mentioned in S. 8," and the plaintiff's name has never been entered in such list. Ss. 3 and 4-Title if conferred by-Talookdar's rights over property-Heritability and transferability of property.

By the 8th Paragraph of the Oudh Proclamation of March, 1858, it was declared, amongst other things, that G.L, Zemindar of Mourawan, and 5 other persons therein mentioned, were thenceforward the sole hereditary proprietors of the lands which they held when Oudh came under British rule. G.L had died in 1854, long before the mutiny. Subsequently summary settlements were made with G.S., (the son of G.L) by the Government between the dates specified in S.3 of Act I of 1869; and a talook-dari Sannad was granted to him before the passing of the Act, and subsequently to the 1st of April, 1858, viz., on the 11th of December, 1859, by which the Government bound itself to maintain him and his heirs as sole proprietors of the estate. The name of G.S. was not contained in the 2nd Schedule annexed to the Act, but that of G.L. was, G.L. did not enter into a Kabooliyat for the lands to which the suit related, but G.S. did.

The Judicial Commissioner held that Act I of 1869 did not confer title in landed estate.

Held, dissenting from his view, that G S. must, in consequence of the Act, be deemed to have acquired a permanent heritable and transferable right in the estates to which the suit related, being those which comprised the villages named in the lists attached to the agreements or kabooliyats, executed by him when the settlements of the different portions of the estates were made; and that, as regards both the villages which were, and those, if any, which were not, previously part of the family property (271-2).

Held further, that G S had power by will or by alienation in his lifetime to transfer the estates which, by virtue of the Act, were not merely heritable, but transferable (272).

GS came within S. 3 of the Act. If he did not, he came within S. 4. It makes no difference, however, in the result which is the section within which the case falls, for -List 2-Entry in-Primogeniture custom in family-Existence of-Entry conclusive as to.

In List 2 of the lists prepared under Act. I of 1869 such talukdars alone are included whose estates, according to the custom of the family "on and before February 13, 1856" ordinarily (the date of the first annexation of Oudh), ' descended upon a single heir." Their title to have their names inserted in that list is based on the specific family custom set out in the section. Under S. 10 of the Act the Courts are bound by the statute to regard as conclusive the fact that there was such a pre-existing custom attaching to these estates on which their inclusion in List 2 was based (280). Non-taluqdari property-Inapplicability to.

The provision as to the conclusiveness contained in S. 10 of Act I of 1869 is confined to estates within the meaning of the Act; it does not apply to non-taluqdari property. The provision in S. 10 of Act I of 1869 that " the Courts shall take judicial notice....such talukdars or grantees" within the meaning of the Act does not mean that the said lists shall be conclusive merely as to the fact that the persons interested therein are talugdars as defined in S. 2 of the Act. The provision of the section goes much further; it means that the Courts shall regard the insertion of the names in those lists " as conclusive evidence " of the fact on which is based the status assigned to the persons named in the different lists (280). Estates Act I of 1869-(Contd.)

SECTION 8-LIST II PREPARED UNDER-(Contd.) that, although the name of J was included in List 2, the fact that the succession was declared in the sanad to go by primogeniture showed that the estate really came under List 3 and not under List 2, and that, consequently, no presumption as to a custom relating to the descent of the estate could arise. For this contention reliance was placed upon the Chief Commissioner's circular of January, 1860, and J's reply to it of February, 1860 (in which he stated his wish to be that the estate should continue in his family, generation after generation in its entirety, without partition, according to the custom of raj-gaddi, and that the younger brother should get maintenance from the gadhi-nishin) as showing that family custom or usage did not form the basis of the declaration as to the rule of descent by primogeniture, which did not come under List 2 but came only under

Held, affirming the Court below, that descent by primogeniture was not confined to cases coming under List 3; that the inclusion of finame in List 2 could only have been made by virtue of a pre-existing custom governing the devolution of the estate to a single heir and S. 10 made the entry of his name conclusive evidence of that fact, that though the provision as to conclusiveness contained in S. 10 did not apply to non-taluqdari property, the existence of the pre-existing custom gave rise to a presumption, and that the onus of establishing that the devolution of the non-taluqdari property was subject to a rule different from that governing the estate lay upon the party setting up such different rule (284). P's name was not entered in List 3 of the Lists prepared under S. 8 of Act I of 1869, and it is contended that because he was in the list of estates which ordinarily devolved upon a single heir, it is to be presumed that the heir was to be ascertained according to the rules of linea primogeniture. Their Lordships cannot concur in that con tention. They are of opinion that when a taluqdar's nam was entered in the second list and not in the third, the Person dying before Act-Successors of estates of-Rights of-Effect of sections on.

The Court cannot construe Ss. 8 and 10 of the Oudh Estates Act of 1869 so as to deprive the successors of the estates of a person who had died before those sections came into operation of rights which they acquired on his death. The contention that the entry of the name of a person who died before the Act came into force can divest rights previously acquired on his death cannot be supported.

In this case the death occurred in 1865, and the successors then acquired their rights under the ordinary Muhammadan law by which the deceased was governed. The Oudh Estates Act did not come into operation until 1869; and to construe its provisions as altering the succession would be not only unjust but plainly contrary to well-settled legal principles. The summary settlement of a zemindary which, at the time of the annexation of Oudh, was in the possession of a Hinds lady, was made with her, a sanad was granted to her and she was entered in Lists 1 and 2 under S. 8 of the Outh Estates Act. She had a permanent beritable and transferable right in the zemindary, and on her death it passed to her daughter.

limited to her own lifetime (217).

The power conferred upon an heir by S. 11 of the Outh Estates Act to alienate " his estate or his right and interest therein " certainly means his estate, if he owns the estate. or his right and interest therein if he owns less than the estate. The words "otherwise than as a Hindu widow" is S. 2 were relied upon as indicative of an intention to give to all heirs other than widows some power which widows do not possess. Much clearer language would have to be shown to justify their Lordships in saying that the Legislature has departed so far from the ordinary principles of law as to enpower people to alienate what may not belong to them. Estates Act I of 1869-(Contd.)

SECTIONS 11, 14 AND 15-(Contd.)

I, Rajah G. S., Talookdar of Jubroulee, etc., do hereby declare that the British Government has conferred on me, in perpetuity, the proprietary right in the estate of Jubusulee, etc., and has asked me for a statement regarding the custosn of primogeniture, with a view that the estate may not be divided. In my family the custom for generations past has been that the eldest member of the family has been considered by all the sharers as the head, to whom the other sharers in the family have been subject, but at the same time have possessed their right to share in the estate. Any sharer wishing to have his share separated on any account can do so under the custom of the family. The eldest member of the family, who is regarded as the chief, cannot, according to the custom of the family, transfer the estate to another. without consulting all the sharers in the family. I therefore wish that the custom which has hitherto prevailed in my family may be adhered to, and not that of a single member succeeding to the whole estate."

Other documents applicable to property in other districts were similar in effect, though not in the identical terms.

Held that, even if some part of the property was selfacquired by G. S., the declaration in those documents of the wish of G. S. acted upon as it was by him and by the other members of the family in his lifetime, and coupled with the tabular statement (set out on p. 274 of the report), was evidence sufficient to prove an alienation intervitor, which in the lifetime of G. The Taluqdars of Oudh and their estates are the subject of special legislation mentioned in the Oudh Estates Acts. The addendum purported to be a will and in terms declared that all the provisions entered in the former will would take effect after the testator's death, and it was duly executed and registered on the date of its execution.

Held that, whether the addendum was regarded as a will or as a codicil, it was perfectly good as a testamentary instrument, that, inasmuch as it had been duly registered as required by S. 13 of Act I of 1869, it was a valid testamentary instrument, and that the will of 1881 was, by virtue of S. 51 of the Succession Act, incorporated and formed part of the addendum, and was legally enforceable. The will being unregistered, the question arose whether, with reference to clause 1, S 13 of Act I of 1869, the will in favour of the widow was invalid. The Courts below held that a widow who got maintenance from a taluka must be considered to have succeeded to an interest in it under cl. 1, S. 13 of Act I of 1869, and that consequently registration was not necessary to validate a will in her favour.

The word "intestate" in Sub-S. (1) of S. 13 of Act I of 1869 evidently means intestate as to the talukdar's estate, that is, his estate as that expression is defined by the Act, the taluk or immoveable property to which alone the Act is declared to extend. This is plain on consideration of S. 13 taken by itself, but it is made still plainer, if possible, by reference to S. 22, which is closely connected with S.13, and which expresses what otherwise would necessarily be implied, and qualifies the word "intestate" by the addition of the words " as to his estate" (58).

Held, that an adopted son was a person who would have succeeded to an intestate within the meaning of S. 13 of the Act, although the authority to adopt him was conferred by the will of such intestate (57-8). -Person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act-Meaning of-Younger son of talukdar mentioned in List 3 or 5 acquiring taluk by transfer from predecessor-Death of, without issue but leaving widow-Succession on.

It is not correct to hold that any person mentioned in S. 22 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, as a possible heir may be said to be " a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to the estate if the testator had died intestate " within the meaning of S. 14 of the Act. The expression " would have succeeded " must be confined to persons in the special line of succession that would have been applicable to the particular case if the transferor or testator had died intestate and the death had occurred at the date of the transfer, or, in the case of a gift by will, at the time when the succession opened. In short, the expression " a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act " is equivalent to " the person or one of the persons to whom the estate would have descended according to the provisions of the special clause of S. 22 applicable to the particular case."

A younger son of a talugdar named in List 3 or List 5 is no doubt among the possible heirs of his father, but he is not within the prescribed line of succession if the father leaves an eldest son or a male lineal descendant of an eldest son.

Where a deceased talukdar, younger son of his predecessor, had acquired the taluk by transfer from his predecessor, and died intestate, held, that his widows were his next heirs and not the son of his elder brother, as being the eldest male lineal descendant of his father.

The transferee not being within the prescribed line of succession, his estate devolved at his death, under S. 15, as it would have done if he had purchased from a stranger; in other words, the fetter of the statutory order of succession no longer applied, (Lord Macnaghten.) Had the taluqdar died intestate the taluna would have descended under S. 22, cl. 11, of the Act to" such persons as would have been entitled to succeed to the estate under the ordinary law to which persons of the religion and tribe" of the talegdar were subject. Upon the death of the mother in 1906 a dispute arose as to the rule of succession applicable. If the succession was governed by primogeniture, the appellant (plaintiff) was admittedly entitled to succeed; while if the succession was governed by the ordinary Hindu Law unOUDH ACTS-(Contd.)

Held, that, treating cl, 11 as regulating the succession, the mother of the taluqdar (S) was not the proper successor according to the Act; and that the will bequeathing the property to her, took the property out of the limitations of the Act, and rendered it under S. 15 subject to the ordinary Hindu Law, according to which the appellant and respondents as representing two lines of egnates would divide the property.

Quere whether as the mother, if she succeeded by inheritance, would only have succeeded to a Hindu woman's estate, which is a limited one without power of bequest, and with only certain powers of transfer inter tites, while the effect of the will had been to give her an absolute estate, the will would have broken the line even if she had been the next heir (241). Transfer within meaning of - Award settling succession dispute and granting portion of estate to person not entitled under Act if a-Effect of, on custom of succession mentioned in Act.

An Oudh talukdar possessed of talukas entered in Lists 2 and 5 of the Lists of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, died leaving a will by which he bequeathed the said talukas in the manner stated therein to his brother, widow, and daughter and her male issue. After his death disputes arose between his widow and his brother, and they referred their disputes with reference to the properties dealt with by the will and with reference to other properties of the deceased to the arbi tration of certain persons, authorising them to settle the disputes after perusing the clauses given in the will and considering other matters. The arbitrators made an award which awarded some of the talukas to the widow, and divided the other properties of the deceased in a certain way.

S. 13-Transfer pursuant to.

An Oudh taluk/lar whose name was entered in List No. 4 prepared under S. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act of 1869, died leaving a will duly registered under S. 13 of the Act, by which will he devised the taluk to the appellant (his great-grandson). The will also provided that in the event of the respondents (the grandsons of the deceased) separating themselves from the appellant, they should receive from him maintenance allowance to be allowed in the form of the grant of the entire village, or a portion thereof; that the land or the entire village given to the respondents (the guara-holders) should not be interfered with by the proprietor of the estate except that he should receive the Government revenue and 10 per cent. (his own does).

It was subsequently arranged between the appellant and the respondents that the latter should live separately from the appellant and should receive maintenance in the form of villages to be appropriated for that purpose under the will. The appellant, to whom the will gave the power and duty of selecting villages for that purpose, allotted certain specified villages to the respondents. Possession of the villages so allotted was given to, and accepted by the respondents, who subsequently paid rent to the appellant for the allotted villages. Shortly afterwards, the respondents applied for mutation of names, the appellant petitioned that the mutation should be allowed "by virtue of the deed of will" of the deceased talukdar, and mutation was effected as prayed for.

In a suit subsequently brought by the appellant claiming possession of the villages allotted to the respondents on the ground that the transfer of the villages was void, as not having been made by registered deed as required by S. 16 of the Oudh Estates Act, held that S. 16 had no application to the case.

The respondents' right to maintenance out of the estate was conferred by the will, which imposed on the talukdar the duty of selecting the particular villages out of which the maintenance should be received. In making this selection the talukdar imposed no additional burden on the estate, but limited and defined in accordance with the will the Lurden imposed by that instrument. The selection, once made and accepted, could not be disturbed either by the talukdar or by the guzara-holders; and if it had been necessary to confirm it by a registered and attested instrument, it would have been the duty of the talukdar to furnish such confirmation. But no such instrument was required, and the provisions of the will followed by the appropriation of villages and delivery of possession vested in the guzara-holders a good and sufficient title (123). prevail in Oudh as to the construction to be put upon it. One passage in the Commissioner's judgment almost implies that, inasmuch as the actual treatment of a son by his father varies in all countries according to the characters of the parent and the child, it is impossible to say what the Legislature meant by the treatment of a grandson "in all respects as a son". Other passages of the same judgment seem to assume that the treatment must in some way be tantamount to an adoption under the Hindu Law, involving the legal consequences of such an adoption, as, e.g., the subjection of the grandson to prohibitions as to marriage which would not otherwise attach to him (233).

Their Lordships are disposed to think that the clause must be construed irrespectively of the spiritual and legal consequences of an adoption under the Hindu law. The fourth clause, like every other clause in S. 22 applies to all the talukdars whose names are included in the second or third of the lists prepared under the Act, whether they are Hindus, Mahomedans, or of any other religion; and it is not until all the heirs defined by the ten first clauses are exhausted that, under the 11th clause, the person entitled to succeed becomes determinable by the law of his religion and tribe (233.4).

It is necessary, then, to put a general as well as a rational construction upon the provision advisedly introduced by the Legislature into the statutory law of succession. And, taking the whole section together, their Lordships are of opinion that wherever it is shown by sufficient evidence that a talukdar, not having male issue, has so exceptionally treated the son of a daughter as to give him in the family the place consequence, and pre-eminence which would naturally belong to a son, if one existed, and would not ordinarily be conceded to a daughter's son, and has thus indicated an intention that the person so treated shall be his successor, such person will be brought within the enactment in question (234). -What amounts to-Evidence-Nature of, required-

L. R. 4 I.A. 228-Explanation of.

In the case reported in L.R. 4 I.A. 228 it was pressed upon the Committee that the treatment of the daughter's son required by the Oudh Estates Act must be something of the nature of adoption. In answer to that suggestion, their Lordships pointed out that the section applies, not to Hindus alone, but to all religions, and they continue as follows :-

"It is necessary, then, to out a general as well as a rational construction upon the provision advisedly introduced by the Legislature into this statutory law of succession. And, taking the whole section together, their Lordships are of opinion that wherever it is shewn by sufficient evidence that a talookdar, not having male issue, has so exceptionally treated the son of a daughter as to give him in the family the place, consequence, and pre-eminence which would naturally belong to a son, if one existed, and would not ordinarily be conceiled to a daughter's son, and has thus indicated an intention that the person so treated shall be his successor, such person will be brought within the enactment in question."

Upon this passage it has been argued that the Committee intended to lay down an authoritative interpretation of the language of sub-S, 4 of universal application; that treatment which does not conform to the description there given cannot rightly be held to fall within the sub-section; and that the Committee meant to indicate that the acts of treatment OUDH ACTS-(Contd.)

Estates Act I of 1869-(Contd.)

S. 22 (4)-DAUGHTER'S SON - TREATMENT BY TALUQUAR OF, IN ALL RESPECTS AS A SON-

able to any other relationship than that of a son. But this argument puts a strained and unnatural construction on the words of the Committee. Their expression "general construction" clearly refers to the propriety of construing the Act that it may apply to Mahomedans and others as well as Hindus. The rest of the passage is only a statement in abstract form of circumstances which will clearly bring a case within sub-S. 4. In the sequel of the judgment they shew that those circumstances exist in the case before them. There is nothing to shew that the Committee intended to set up a standard to which all cases must conform, or that they demanded more demonstrative proof for this kind of question than for any other,

Their Lordships hold that whenever the evidence shews that a daughter's son has been treated by the talookdar in all respects as his own, it is sufficient to bring the case within sub-S. 4; that the question is one of fact, and must be tried and determined by the same methods as other questions of fact; and that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to lay down a test for such a question in terms less wide than those of the Act itself (168). Held, on the evidence that the appellant, the son of a daughter of a deceased Oudh talukdar, had "been treated by him in all respects as his own son" within the meaning of cl. 4 of S. 22 of Act I of 1869, and that he was therefore entitled to succeed to the taluk, the talukdar having died intestate, (Sir James W. It was contended in the lower Court that the appellant being the son of a daughter of a rival wife, and having been treated by his step-mother, the talukdar, in all respects as her own son, came within the meaning of cl. 4 of S. 22 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869. It was, however, found by both the lower Courts that there was no proof that he had been so treated, and their Lordships agree in that finding (13). (Sir Barnes Peacock.) BRIJ INDAR BAHADUR SINGH v. RANKE JANKI KOER.

The question was whether a daughter's son was treated by an Oudh talookdar in all respects as his own son within the meaning of sub-S. 4 of S. 22 of the Oudh Estates Act.

It was common ground that the mother of the daughter's son in question was after her marriage taken into the house of her father (the talukdar), and that the daughter's son was born there, and from that time until the talookdar's death he was treated as a child of the house. Evidence was given of a number of incidents, some apparently trivial and some important, for the purpose of shewing that the talukdar's treatment of the daughter's son was that of a son. As against that it was contended that all those incidents were sufficiently accounted for by the circumstance that the daughter and her son were inmates of the talukdar's house, and that the daughter's son was his grandson, and in the line of succession. Both the Courts below held that the daughter's son had been treated as a son by the talookdar.

Held, affirming the Courts below, that the evidence was enough to justify the conclusion that the daughter's son had been treated as a son by the deceased taluqdar within the meaning of Sub-S. 4 of S. 22 of the Act (166). (Lord Hobbouse.) UMRAO BEGUM v. IRSHAD HUSAIN.

The original plaintiff in the suit, A, was the widow of an Oudh talookdar, who died leaving no son. The defendants in the suit were U and S, the daughters of the deceased, and a son of S. The talook was entered in Lists 2 and 3 under the Oudh Estates Act; it devolved to a single heir by primogeniture; and it fell under the provisions of S. 22 of the Act.

On the death of the talookdar, the son of S claimed to be entitled to the talook under sub-section 4, inasmuch as he had been treated by the deceased talookdar in all respects as his own son, and obtained possession of the talook. A thereupon instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose for the recovery of the talook. The lower Courts held that the son of S had been treated by the deceased talookdar in all respects as his own son, and that he was therefore entitled to the talook. They accordingly dismissed the suit of A. A appealed to Her Majesty in Council and died pending the appeal. Thereupon U. being in the line of succession, applied to the Court below (the Judicial Commissioner) to be allowed to revive and prosecute the appeal. The Judicial Commissioner was of opinion that the application ought not to be granted, because A only claimed a life-estate in the talook, and U's claim did not arise as representing A, but under an independent title (if any) based on S. 22, Sub-S. 11 of the Act; but be directed the proceedings to be forwarded to the Registrar of the Privy Council as a supplementary record, U then applied to Her Majesty in Council for an order of revivor and substitution.

Their Lordships granted leave to U to revive and prosecute the appeal, especially as both parties desired that she should be allowed to do so (169).

Their Lordships also felt difficulty in acceding to U sapplication, and in fact the case is peculiar and novel. But it appeared to them that the question of the status of the son of S must be settled even if it should only affect the past income; that it would be simpler and less expensive to try it by the existing appeal than by a new suit; and that the Oudh Estates Act so far created a unity of interest between the persons in the line of succession as to justify the substitution, at least in such a case as this, of the more remote claimant for the nearer one (168.9). - Brother vounger-Sour of prodeconed elder brother - Succession-Preferential right.

Held that the reasonable construction of Sub-S, 6 of S, 22 of Act I of 1860 was that the brothers of a deceased talookdar were intended to take in the same manner as sons were directed to take by the preceding sub-sections, and that the descendants of a predeceased elder brother were preferential heirs to a surviving younger brother (88).

S. 22 begins by saying that if a talookdar or groutee whose name shall be inserted in the second, third, or fifth of the lists mentioned in S. 8, or his heir or legatee, shall die intestate as to his estate, such estate shall descend as follows, and then there are eleven sub-sections forming a scheme of descent. The plaintiff claims under sub-section 6, but in constraing that the whole of the sub-sections should be looked at. The first says that the estate shall descend to the eldest son of the talookdar and his male lineal descendants. The second says that if such eldest son shall have died in the life-time of the talookdar leaving male lineal descendants, the estate shall descend to his eldest and every other son successively according to their respective seniorities and their respective male lineal descendants. The third says that if such eldest son shall have died in his father's lifetime without leaving male lineal descendants, the estate is to descend to the second and every other son of the talookdar successively according to their respective seniorities and their respective male lineal descendants. That male lineal descendants here are intended to include the descendants of a son dying in his father's lifetime is apparent from Sub-S. 4. That is " or in default of such son or descendants," then to such son of a daughter as has been treated by the talookdar in all respeets as his own son, and to the male lineal descendants of such son. The estate is to go to the daughter's son only in default of male lineal descendants of a second or other son, In Suh-S. 4 male lineal descendants of a daughter's son must have the same meaning as in Sub-S. 3, for by Sub-S. 5 the estate is to descend to a person adopted by the talookdar only in default of such son or descendants, prz., a daughter's son or his male lineal descendants. The 6th section says, in default of an adopted son the estate is to Jescend to the eldest and every other brother of the talookdar success. ively according to their respective seniority and their respective male lineal descendants. The words here should be held to have the same meaning as they have in Sub-Ss. 3 and 4. In Sub-S. 7 the words are " in default of any such brother "to the widow, omitting " descendants "; but their Lordships cannot think that it was intended by this omission to postpone the succession of male lineal descendants of brothers who died in the talookdar's life-time t'll after persons mentioned in Sub-Ss. 7, 8, 9, and 10, and only to allow such male lineal descendants to succeed under Sub-S. 11 according to the ordinary law to which the talcokdar is subject. It is the reasonable construction that the brothers were intended to take in the same manner as sons (87.8) (Sir Richard Couch.) HAIDER ALI P. TASSADUK RASUL KHAN. (1890) 17 I. B and G, two brothers, subject to the law of the Mitakshara, became on the death of their father jointly entitled to an ancestral taluga, and they held the taluga as a joint family until the general confiscation of the landed estates in Oudh in 1858. Later, under the Governor-General's proclamation of March, 1858, B, the elder brother, as the head of the joint family, received back the taluga, and what was called the " second summary settlement" was made with him in July, 1858. In 1800 a sanad was granted to him. He was entered in list 3 under the Oadh Estates Act, 1869-namely, as being a taluqdar to whom a primogeniture sanad had been given. From the serond summary settlement up to the regular settlement in 1864. R, by his acts and declarations, obtained the estate for himself and his brother G as members of the joint Mitakshara family. In 1867, however, there was a sepration between the brothers, and an agreement by which B took the estate absolutely and G an annuity. B died in 1871 leaving G. his brother, a widow, and a daughter, the plaintiff, but no male issue.

Meld, that on the death of B without male issue or adopted son, the taluka devolved under Cl. (6) of S. 22 of the Ad on his sole surviving brother, G, and that on G's death it devolved, under Cl. The estate was entered in the lists No. 1 and No. 2, established by S. 8 of Act I of 1869; and, consequently, it descended according to the rules pointed of in S. 22 of that Act. On the death of the last male owner of the estate, it descended, according to clause (11) of S. 22, to the heir according to Hindu law.

On the death of the heir without having been married, held, that his mother became his heir, and took a nother's interest in the estate, which was not an estate for life, but a woman's estate by inheritance (174). (Sir Barnes Pessek).

The decisions in L. R. 20 I. A. 77, 37 I. A. 168 and 48
I. A. 228 clearly establish that the "ordinary law" referred to in the Oudh Estates Act of 1869 is the law which would govern the parties apart from the statute and includes any sanad giving title to the property in dispute. It is true that these decisions were rendered with reference to clause (11) of S. 22, and not with reference to S. 23 of the Act; but the terms of the latter section are precisely similar to those of S. 22, clause (11), and their Lordships see no sufficient reason for giving to them a different construction,

The dictum of the Board in the judgment of the Board of S. 8 of the statute. While, therefore, the specific rules delivered by Sir Barnes Peacock in L. R. 5 I. A. 1 at p. 13 is no authority for the view that the effect of S. 22, cl. (11) or of S. 23 of the Act, was wholly to destroy the rules of succession laid down under sanads which had been so recently granted. Probably the dictum means no more than this, that the Act supersedes the sanad where the two are in conflict. (Viscount Care). BADRI NARAIN SINGH P. HARNAM KUAR. (1922) 49 I.A. 276 (284 5) -

Primogeniture Sanad-Estate granted under, and entered in lists 1 & 5-Succession to-Linial primogeniture -Nearness of degree-Rule-Ordinary law of religion and tribe in cl. (11)-Sanad conditions if included in.

By a Government sauad dated 1860 a taluşa was conferred upon R on the condition, amougst others, that in the event of R dying intestate, or any of his successors dying intestate, the estate should descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture. R's name was entered in Lists 1 and 5 mentioned in the Outh Estates Act, 1869, On R's death intestate and without issue, the estate passed into the possession of his widow. On the death of the widow the succession to the estate was contested by R's cousin, the respondent, who would be the heir if the succession was governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture, and his uncle, the appellant, who would succeed if it was regulated by nearness of degree.

Held, that the rule of lineal primogeniture applied to the case and not that of nearness of degree, and that the respondent was entitled to succeed.

The appellant contends that he is entitled to the succession because, by the ordinary law to which it must be supposed reference is made in S. 22, (11) of the Oudh Estates Act, nearness in decree is preferable to lineal discent in other words, that sub-S. (11) amounts to a revocation or an abrogation of the rule of succession laid down in the sanad under which the taluqdar, R. received his property and that S. 8 of the Act did not really amount to a declaration that the succession "shall thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture." but only used that phrase in the course of a narrative identifying the fifth list of grantees. It is fairly clear, however, that, if a repugnancy does not arise within the statute itself, at least some thing which would have the same effect has been produced, namely, an inconsistency between the order of succession specified in the sanad and some other law of succession under the ordinary law of the taluqdar's religion and tribe; and it is maintained that in these circumstances the statute, and the statute alone, must govern.

S. 22 of the Act in so far as it describes in the first ten of its sub-sections the specific order of heirs preferred to the succession, must have force given to it to the effect of standing as a statutory substitute for any line of succession which might have been set forth in the sanad. The provision in sub-S. (11) that, in default of any one taking under the previous sub-sections, there should be preferred " such persons as would have been entitled to succeed to the estate under the ordinary law to which persons of the religion and tribe of such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee are subject is, however, nothing else than a general relegation of parties to the situation in which they would have been found apart from the statute. But that situation is found in the sanad itself; and it is also contained, either by way of affirmance or at least by way of narrative, in the fifth list of succession in sub-Ss. 1 to 10 of the Act, must be held to displace the rule of succession prescribed by the sanad, the general reference to what is not covered by those specific rules must include a reference to the rights of parties as contained in the sanad, which was the original title to the property. By this simple construction the alleged repugnancy disappears. The declaration and condition of the sanad being part of the original title to the property is an essential part of that regulation of the ordinary law of the religion and tribe and would have been respected accordingly. The question was as to the right to succeed to an Oudh taluqa held by a Hindu widow as her absolute or separate property. The rival claimants were her daughter, a son of the daughter of the widow's rival wife, and the male heirs of her husband. The rights of the parties fell to be determined by the provisions of cl. While there are several decisions on cases coming under list 2 to the effect that it is enough to provide a single heir, and that when the succession is regulated by clause 11 of $.22 of the Oudh Estates Act this single heir is the nearest in the succession, and may be male or female; there is no decision to this effect when the case comes under list 3 where the rule is that of primogeniture. But there are two decisions -26 All. 308, when the succession was regulated by the sanad; and 32 All 599, which came under list 5-which show that the rule of male lineal primogeniture applies after the special successions provided by clauses (1)—(10) are exhausted and where clause (11) is invoked (240).

Clause (11) does provide special limitations, and does not simply remit the succession to the unqualified ordinary law of the religion and tribe (235-6).

If clause (11) should be treated as providing special limitations then, though the descent is to be according to the ordinary law of the religion and tribe, yet this ordinary law operates only so far as it is not inconsistent with the overriding consideration that the succession is to be governed by the rule of primogeniture, which implies also impartibility (235). An Oudh estate which had been confiscated by the British Government on the annexation of Oudh in 1856, was re-granted under a Sanad which provided that, in the event of the grantee dying intestate, or of any of his successors dying intestate, the estate should descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture. On the death of the taluqdar leaving a widow but no issue, the question arose who was entitled to succeed to the estate, the nearest male heir of the deceased, or his widow. The taluqa was included in Lists 1 and 4 of Act I of 1869. The nearest male heir founded his claim on the terms of the sanad; the widow contended that, by virtue of S. 23 of the Act, the succession was to be regulated not by the sand but by the Mithakshara law which was the ordinary law to which the members of the deceased's tribe and religion were subject, and that under that law she was entitled to the estate.

Held, that the effect of S. 23 of the Act was not to displace the rule of succession prescribed by the sanad and to substitute for it the ordinary rules of succession prevailing among Hindus who are subject to the law of the Mithal shara, and that the nearest male heir was entitled to sacre under the terms of the sanad (283.4). In a case in which an award of the British Indian Association of Oudh found "that the two villages, given as maintenance, be decreed in favour of f (to continue) as heretofore," the question arose whether the expression "(to continue) as heretofore" in the award signified that f was to take by succession the same right of possession which had been previously enjoyed by his father and grandfather, or whether it merely gave f a right of possession for his lifetime, determinable on his death by the grantor's representative for the time being.

Held, that, in construing the award of the British Indian Association, it was legitimate to refer not only to evidence of antecedent Possession bearing upon that point which was independent of the proceedings in the submission to the Association, but to those quasi-judicial acts of the arbiters upon which their ultimate award was based. Held that, the Amendment Act of 1910 had not the effect of making the property bequeathed once more subject to Act 1 of 1869, and that with the failure of the bequest the property passed out of the Act and became subject to the Hindu law.

It would be anomalous, to say the least, to suppose that the legislature intended by Act III of 1910 to revive rights that had disappeared in consequence of the failure of the bequest in 1869 when other rights had been created in the meantime. A, the then taluqdar of P, executed in 1874 in favour of the father of the defendants, a perpetual lease of three villages. It was agreed in the deed of lease that the lessee should pay annually to the lessor for rent, Rs. 2,191, and should be liable to contributions such as chut (presents), marking presents to dancers, raised (supply) and other dues paying also the patieuris and chaukidars, and defraying the village expenses. The lessee was not to alienate on pain of the lease becoming void.

Lessor and lessee both died in 1889. The plaintiff, the heir and devisee under A's will then brought the suit out of which the appeal arose for a declaration that the lease was lialde to resumption by him, on the ground that it was granted at a favourable rate of rent, without the sanction referred to in S. 52 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876.

The Court below held that the lease in question was a grant within the meaning of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, but dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the lease was granted at a favourable rate of rent.

Their Lordships affirmed the judgment below, observing: The Courts have treated the matter as a question of inquiry whether the rent was a favourable one or not and they have

It appeared from an application filed by the surviving brother in reply to the objections taken by the nephews in those proceedings that the surviving brother asked that "the property of the deceased should be divided at present according to possession, and a separate suit will be filed in a competent Court as regards the title in respect of the property of the deceased." Ss. 178, 174 - Disqualified proprietor - Dek-Right to contract-Simple debt band executed while edde under charge-Validity.

From a perusal of the group of sections (161 to 177) in the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, intituled "Chapter VIII, Court of Wards," it will be clear that the Act we not intended to interfere with the personal status or right of an adult disqualified proprietor who is neither idiot not lunatic, except as regards the management of his property or anything expressly prohibited. There is no prohibition of a disqualified proprietor contracting debts, or borrowing money, and it is contemplated in S. 174 that such a person may enter into contracts which, but for the provisions of that section, might result in his property being taken in execution. But the disqualified proprietor may not without the sanction of the Court create any charge upon his property. It was argued, however, that to allow a disqualified proprietor to contract debt would enable him by amicipation to waste the estate when restored to his care, and so defeat the objects of the Act, and would therefore be inconsistent with the other provisions and purposes of the Act. This argument would have been a cogent one for the consideration of the Legislature in framing the Act. But there is no necessary implication of a prohibition to contract personal obligations and their Lordships are not entitled to read into the Act a curtailment of the proprietor's personal rights which they do not find there.

Held, therefore, that a person, who, on his own application, was declared a disqualified proprietor under the provisions of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, and whose property was placed under the charge of the Court of Wards, was not incompetent to execute a simple money bond without the sanction of the Court. A disqualified proprietor in Oudh, whose estate had been taken under the superintendence of the Court of Wards under the Oudh Land Revenue Act, borrowed certain sums of money while the estate was under management. After the estate was released from superintendence, the creditors obtained a personal decree against the proprietor for the recovery of the said sums and sought to execute the same against the estate after its release from superintendence.

The object of the Act would be frustrated if the decree were so allowed to be executed. Further S. 174 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act expressly provides against such a course. The phrase in that section, "while his property is under such superintendence," is a phrase annexed to and elucidative of the verbal expression "contract entered into by any such person." S. 174 is meant to protect properly against the execution of a decree made in respect of "any contract entered into" during a certain period of time, namely, while the property is under such superintendence (71-2). 11, who owed money to the appellant under certain bonds, became a lunatic, and was so declared by an order of Court, and his estate became subject to the administration of the Court of Wards, and was placed under the charge of the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki. Subsequently the appellant sued the Deputy Commissioner for the recovery of the amount due to him. It appeared that the wife of H had been appointed his guardian, and that she was guardian at the time the decree of the first Court was made. The appellate Court dismissed the suit, on the ground that the guardian of H, and not the Court of Wards, ought to have been sued.

Held that the Court below was wrong in dismissing the suit on that ground.

Even if the wife was appointed guardian, and was guardian at the time the decree of the first Court was made, still the fact remains that the appellant had made party to the suit the Court of Wards, the authority which had the property of the lunatic under its control, and which would have to answer a decree if a decree were made, (Lord Hobbouse). Preemption rights conferred by-Transfer of Property Act-Statutory rights attaching to ogreement for-Sale under-Conflict between-Effect.

Another question turned upon the possible competition between the rights acquired by a contract for sale and those attaching under the Oudh Act to a completed conveyance. It was found that the agreement for sale of Raja M's plots was prior in date to the agreement for sale of block No. 19 to the appellant, but that the registered sale deed of the appellant preceded by some ten days the completion of Kaja M's purchase.

Quarre whether under those circumstances the appellant had, as held by the Courts below, no right of pre-emption as against Raja M.

It may be that in such a case there is a direct conflict between the statutory rights attached under Chapter III of the Transfer of Property Act to an agreement for sale, and the right of pre-emption conferred by the Oudh Laws Act. A large tract of waste land, which had originally been granted by the Secretary of State to one C, and which had under subsequent settlement proceedings been constituted a separate "village" (the word "village" denoting little, if anything, more than a revenue unit), was vested, on C's death, under the provisions of his will in ten persons living in England, and was managed on their behalf in India by one S. The owners being decisions of disposing of the property, it was divided up into a number of blocks, which were offered for sale locally by S. Appellant purchased one of those blocks; and he claimed a right of pre-emption in respect of the salss of other blocks to other persons, basing his claim on the provisions of Chapter II of the Oudh 31 M. L. J. 72. | Laws Act of 1876.

Laws Act XVIII of 1876-(Contd.)

It appeared that the appellant, knowing that all the blocks were in the market, told S that he wished to purchase only that block which was adjacent to his own estate, and which he eventually purchased, and that he did not wish in purchase any other block. The oral agreement for sale with one of the resuondents was no doubt entered into some time prior to the agreement with the appellant, but when the appellant refused to purchase any of the other blocks he was aware of the agreement with that respondent and acquiesced in it.

Held that even if the prior completed purchase by the appellant would, under other circumstances, have given him the right of pre-emption in respect of the blocks purchased by the respondents, he must be taken by his conduct to have waived that right, and that it would be inequitable to allow him to re-assert it. -S. 3-Gift-Meaning of-Trust-Gift through medium of, if included.

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner has held that the term "gifts" as used in S. 3 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876) does not include gifts in trust. Their Lordships cannot adopt such a narrow construction of the term "gifts" as would exclude any gift where the donor's bounty passes to his intended beneficiary through the medium of a trust, so that while a gift by A to C direct would be governed by the Mahomedan Law, a gift by A to B in trust for C would be governed by some other law. So to hold would defeat the plain purpose and object of the section of the statute. (Lord Atkinson) SADIK HUSAIN KHAN v. HASHIM ALI KHAN.

S. 7—Village community within meaning of —Interest in land acquired by devise—Persons having, if constitute a village community merely by reason thereof— Village community not existing otherwise.

In 1872, the Secretary of State made a grant of a large tract of waste land in the Gonda district to one. C. The land was described in the deed of grant as situated in the village of Agya, but under subsequent settlement proceedings it was constituted a separate "village "known as Cookenagar Grant, the word "village "in that connection, however, denoting little (if anything) more than a revenue unit. The village was, on C's death, vested under the provisions of his will in ten persons living in England, and was managed on their behalf in India by one S.

Quarte whether C's devisces merely by reason of an interest in the land so acquired should be assumed to constitute a village community which was not shown to exist apart from themselves.

The expression "village community" is not defined in the Oudh Laws Act of 1876, and no evidence was given in any of the suits out of which this appeal has arisen as to the existence of a "village community" in Cookenagar

Where the question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to pre-empt the village of Pahladpur, under S. 9 of the Oudh Luws Act, which admittedly applied to the sale of that village, and it appeared that the plaintiff was owner of a chak of thirty-three acres in Pahladpur, and that by the settlement under which he held, he paid Rs. 40 per annum of revenue, the same being payable through the lambardars of the village; but that he did not reside in the village, keld that he was under the combined operation of Ss. 108 and 112 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, liable for the revenue assessed on the whole mehal and was therefore a co-sharer of the whole mehal within the meaning of $.96 the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, with a right of pre-emption thereunder. Held, further that the fact that the share of the plaintiff in the mehal consisted of a separate chak did not make him the less a co-sharer in the sense of the Ad. and that the circumstance of his being non-resident was immaterial. S. 9 (1) & (2)—Pre-emption right—Co-sharers of sub-division of tenure—Co-sharers of whole mahal—Meaning of.

The suit related to a claim to pre-emption under the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, in respect of three entire villages and two patties or portions of two other villages forming part of a taluqa called S.

In 1864 on the occasion of the regular settlement a compromise was made between Ganga, who had obtained a sanad of the taluqa and B and P, by which one-half of the taluqa was assigned to Ganga as superior proprietor and the other half to B and P in equal shares in under-proprietary right; they paying the Government revenue plus malikana at the rate of 10 p.c. to the taluqdar, and being jointly liable to him in respect of the same as rent. On the death of P, on whom both the shares devolved, his (P's) property devolved upon Gajadhar and Ganesh. In 1893, a partition was made between Gajadhar and Ganesh under which the suit property was assigned to Gajadhar. A decree was made in accordance with the partition, and mutation of names was effected accordingly, but no separate engagement was made for payment of the Government revenue in respect of the three entire villages or the two pattis assigned to Gajadhar.

In 1902, Gajadhar sold the property in question to Harihar, who had succeeded his father Ganga as taloqdar of S. Thereupon Ganesh filed the suit against Harrihar and Gajadar.

The Courts below held that the suit ought to be dismissed as regards the three entire villages, and that as regards the two pattis Ganesh and Harrihar were equally entitled to the right of pre-emption, as being the only other members of the village communities to which the patties respectively appertained. Lots were ordered to be drawn as regards the two pattis, and as the result of their being drawn, the right to buy two pattis was found to be with Harrihar. The suit was therefore dismissed in its entirety.

Held, that the decision of the Court below was right.

The villages assigned to P did not form a separate mahal in the ordinary sense. The kabuliyat of the taluqa in which they are included shews that each village in the taluqua was separately assessed to revenue, and that the taluqdar entered into one engagement for the payment of the revenue on all the villages. The whole taluqua is, therefore, what is called in the Act a talqudari mahal, consisting of a large number of villages each of which is separately assessed to revenue and may be regarded as an inferior mahal. The plaintiff is certainly not a co-sharer in the taluqdari mahal, for the taluqudar has no co-sharer. Nor is the plaintiff a co-sharer in any of the inferior mahals of which the taluqua is made up.

Although Gajadhar and Ganesh may bave been jointly liable to the taluqdar for the Government revenue plus malikana, as the rent of the villages and patties assigned to D & P under the compromise of 1864, Gajadhar and Ganesh were not at the date of the sale to Hariar co-sharers in any sub-division of the tenure in which the property in question was comprised or in the whole mahal. The word 'Mahal' in the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), means any parcel or parcels of land which have been separately assessed to or are held under a separate engagement for the revenue, and for which a separate record of rights has been prepared. Each Mauza or village is, as a general rule, a separate Mahal hat a Mahal may consist of two or more Mouzas or only a portion of one Mauza. Where each village in a Taluk is separately assessed to revenue and the Talukdar enters into one engagement for the payment of the revenue on all the villages, the whole Taluk is a Talukdari Mahal consisting of a number of villages each of which is separately assessed to revenue and may be regarded as an inferior Mahal. Ss. 9 to 13—Preemption—Claim to—Maintainability—Denial of right of cosharer tendor and setting up exclusive title—What amounts to—Effect.

The respondent sucd to recover from the appellant her moiety of the estate of M, the whole of which had been taken possession of by the appellant, but in which he was only entitled to a moiety. The respondent had prior to suit sold half of her moiety to certain persons, and they were also added as plaintiffs in the suit. The appellant pleaded that the respondent had no right or interest whatever in the estate of M, because she had, by a relinquishment deed executed by her before the sale to the co-plaintiffs, withdrawn all her claim to any right and interest in the estate of M. and she (respondent) had therefore no longer any power of alienation. The appellant further pleated that he had, in any event, a right of pre-emption in respect of the property, and that no notice as required by law was issued. He claimed that upon payment by him of the price mentioned in the deed, the sait should be dismissed. The deed of relinquishment set up by the appellant was found to be not genuine.

Held that the appellant's claim to pre-empt was unsustainable (32).

The provisions of Ss. 9, 10, 11 & 13 of the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, as to pre-emption were inapplicable where the person who would be entitled to pre-emption denied the title of the person who proposed to sell, and alleged that they were not co-sharers, and that he was entitled to the whole of the property. The appellant, by setting up the relinquishment deed, had done that. The position taken up by him was altogether inconsistent with claiming a right of pre-emption (32-3). (Sir Richard Couch.) The owners of a large tract of waste land, which had under settlement proceedings been constituted a 'village," being desirous of disposing of the same, had it divided up into a number of blocks, and offered the blocks for sale. Appellant purchased one of those blocks and he claimed a right of pre-emption io respect of the sales of other blocks to other persons, basing his claim on the provisions of Ch. II of the Oudh Laws Act of 1876.

It appeared that the appellant, knowing that all the blocks were in the market, told the owners that he intended to purchase only that block which was adjacent to his own estate, and which he eventually purchased, and that he did not wish to purchase any other block. The oral agreement for sale with one of the respondents was no doubt entered into some time prior to the agreement with the appellant, but when the appellant refused to purchase any of the other blocks he was aware of the agreement with that respondent and acquiesced in it. No formal notice of the proposal to sell any of the plots was given to the appellant.

Held that the appellant, who refused to purchase any of the other plots and who acquiesced in the sale to the respondent could not complain of the want of notice under S. 10 of the Oudh Laws Act. (Sir George Lowndes.) RAJA PATESHWARI PARTAB NARAIN SINGH P. SITARAM.

The Oudh Rent Act XIX of 1868 recognises three classes of persons, and three only, as having an interest in and entitled to hold land for the purposes of the Act in the province of Oudh, viz., "proprietor", "under-proprietor" and "tenant." That the Act does not recgnise any other status except the three it defines is clear from S. 102.

ary right in land." In March, 1879, the respondents being then in arrear, they and the appellant agreed that the lesses might be dispossessed for non-payment. In 1882 and 1883, the appellant obtained decrees for arrears of rent against the respondents. Those decrees remaining unsatisfied, the appellant filed a suit for possession of mouzah P under S. 83, cl. (4) of the Oudh Rent Act for non-payment of rent and for cancellation of the lease.

Held that the suit was unsustainable.

It is clear that under the decree of 1869 the parties had not a right to cancel the lease under the terms of the Reat Act. With regard to the agreement of 1879, the plaintiff could not seek to enforce that agreement by suing in the Rent Court. His only remedy would have been to have seed in the civil court upon that agreement. (Sir Barnas Proceeck.) RAJAH MADHO SINGH v. AJUDHIA SINGH.

CIVIL AND REVENUE COURTS-JURISDICTION.

-Proprietor-Tenant-Ejectment-Declaration that a person has no proprietary or under-proprietary right in a village but is merely a tenant-Cause of action-Decision of Revenue Court that he has under-proprietary right.

The suit was brought by the appellant for a decree for the proprietary possession of a mawza in Oudh and for a declaration that the defendant had no proprietary right and no under-proprietary right in that mawza. The defendant claimed that he had an under-proprietary right in the village. The title of the plaintiff as proprietor within the meaning of that term in Act XXII of 1886 and Act III of 1901 was not disputed.

The Sub-Judge, who tried the suit, found on the evidence that the defendant had no proprietary or under-proprietary right in the village and was merely a tenant. On that finding he dismissed the suit, so far as the claim to eject the tenant was concerned, but gave the plaintiff a decree declaring that the defendant had no proprietary or under-proprie-6 C. W. Rent Act Amendment Act III of 1901-(Contd.) CIVIL AND REVENUE COURTS-JURISDICTION-(Contd.)

On appeal, the Judicial Commissioner agreed with the Sub-Judge that the defendant had no proprietary or underproprietary right in the village, and held that the defendant was only a tenant, but declined to affirm the declaration which the Sub-Judge had made, and dismissed the suit.

Held, reversing the Judicial Commissioner, that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration which had been made by the Sub-Judge.

On the finding of the Sub-Judge that the defendant had no proprietary or under-proprietary right in the village and was merely a tenant, the civil court had no jurisdiction to give the plaintiff a decree for possession, an ejectment of a tenant to whom Act III of 1901 applies being in Oudh exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Court of Revenue, But the Civil Court was competent to make the declaration that the defendant had no proprietary or under-proprietary right in the village, and it was necessary that it should be made by the Civil Court, as the Court of Revenue, holding that the defendant had an under-proprietary right in the village, had declined jurisdiction in proceedings for the ejectment of the defendant which the plaintiff had brought in the Court of Revenue. The question as to whether the defendant had or had not a proprietary or an under-proprietary right was one for the Civil Court and when raised and persisted in was one which the Court of Revenue could not finally decide. -Tenant-Status and terms of holding of-Proprietary or under-proprietary rights of his in lands held by him-Decision as to-Declaration that he is not proprietor or under proprietor-Cause of action-Decision of Board of Revenue.

The suit was by the plaintiff for a declaration that the defendants had no proprietary right of the nature of zemindari, superior or inferior, in a mawza, and for a declaration that a decision of the Board of Revenue of the 26th March. 1897, did not affect his rights. That decision of the Board of Revenue was in effect that the defendants were in 1852 owners of Zemindari rights in the village; that there was nothing to show that they had ever lost their zemindary rights; that there was reasonable ground for presuming that they were not ordinary lessees; and that it was for the predecessor in title of plaintiff to prove in the civil court that they were ordinary lessees. In their written statement the defendants alleged that they were perpetual Thekadars of the village; they did not set up any right to possession by virtue of any proprietary or under-proprietary rights; and they pleaded that the suit could not be maintained in a civil court. The defendants did not by their written pleadings claim to hold any proprietary or under-proprietary right in the village, or any position in the village other than that of tenants. But they had in 1896 filed objections in the Court of Revenue, in reply to a notice of ejectment issued by the predecessor in title of the plaintiff, in which they claimed to be in possession of the suit mauza as Zemindars, and in the suit out of which the appeal arose they tried to prove certain alleged acts of theirs which, if established, would tend to suggest that they held a proprietary right in the village.

The Sub-Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for the two declarations for which he had asked in his plaint. On appeal the Judicial Commissioner reversed the Sub-Judge OUDH ACTS - (Contd.)

had not in the suit claimed any proprietary or under-proprietary right in their written statement.

Held, reversing the Judicial Commissioner, that the plaintiff was entitled to the declarations which the Sub-

Judge had given them.

In Oudh, in cases to which Act III of 1901 applies, the Court of Revenue has the exclusive jurisdiction to determine what is the status of a tenant of lands, and what are the special or other terms upon which such tenant holds, and the Civil Courts have the exclusive jurisdiction to decide whether or not a person in possession of lands holds a proprietary or an under-proprietary right in the lands. The decision of the Board of Revenue of the 20th March, 1897, which was subsequently acted upon in the preparation of the khewat of the mauza in question, made it necessary for the plaintiff to bring the suit to establish that the defendants had no proprietary or under-proprietary right in the village, and the fact that the defendants did not in their written statement in the suit set up that they had any proprietary or under-proprietary right, did not disentitle the plaintiff to the declarations claimed by him (391-2). Bequest of settled estates-Power of-Scope of, and limits to.

The power of bequest of settled estates conferred by S. 18 of the Act is very strictly limited. The owner of a settled estate thereby constituted a fresh stock of descent is not to be permitted by his will to invade that part of the scheme of the Act which has been enacted in the general interest Clearly enough he is by this section given power by his will to select as his successor to the settled estate any person, tracing through himself, who belongs to any of the classes specified in S. 22 of the Act I of 1869. He may make the last of these first if he be so minded. But may he do anything more, and, if so, to what extent and in what way? The answer to these questions is beset by doubts of varying intensity (166). (Lord Blanesburgh.) KRISHNA KUMAPI DEVI D. BHAIYA RAJENDRA SINHA.

S. 18 (2) PROVISO.

-Estate placed under Act after will but before death of testator-Bequest by will of bare life interest in to daughter in law, subject to such bare life interest to widow, and with gift over to heir-at-law of testator who might be living at death of daughter in law-Validity of bequest to daughter-in-law.

S, a talukdar, whose name was entered in Lists 1 and 2 prepared under S. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act of 1869, owned 3 mahals, B, L, and U, and certain furniture and moveables. In 1906, S applied for permission to declare that Mahal B might thereafter become a settled estate subject to the provisions of the Oudh Settled Estates Act of 1900. The permission asked for was granted by notification dated 24-4-1908, and, on 21-5-1908, S, by a statutory declaration made irrevocable and duly registered and published on the 5th September following, declared that Mahal B should thereafter be held subject to the provisions of the Act of 1900 aforesaid. While his application to Government was still in suspense, S executed and registered a will on 17-6-1907 devising and bequeathing all his property and estate whatever and wheresoever situate, to his wirlow for her life, and subject thereto to his daughter-in-law for her life. The will provided that neither the widow nor the daughter-in-law should have power under any circumstances by sale, alienation, mortgage, or otherwise, to dispose of or incumber the whole or any portion of the property bequeathed for any period extending beyond the term of her natural life. The will also provided that, upon the death of the daughter-in-law, the property was to descend "to the person or persons then living who under the provisions of the said Act I of 1869" (Oudh Estates Act of 1869) "would be entitled to succeed thereto on the failure or determination of the limitations hereinbefore contained." S died in July,

Held that the devise of Mahal B made by the will in favour of the daughter-in-law was invalid in virtue of the provisions of the Oudh Settled Estates Act of 1900 to which, at the testator's death, the Mahal was subject.

The devise of the Mahal to the daughter-in-law made by the testator was not a devise of an estate to be held by her OUDH ACTS-(Contd.)

because the devise to her did not carry with it the leasing power referred to in $.10 of the Act, and, by its terms, prevented her from becoming a fresh stock of descent. The devise to her was a devise of a bare life interest shorn of the incidents attached, for the public benefit, to the statutory estate created by the Act. As such, it is a devise prohibited by this proviso. The gift to the daughter in law cannot be treated as a gift to her for her life of the rents and profits of the estate charged upon that estate in the hands of the first respondent, upon whom, as the testator's heir-at-law, the estate had devolved as an estate undisposed of during the life of the appellant (the daughter-in-law), because that would subject the estate or the profits thereof to a demand, charge or incumbrance in her favour and, as such, it would be a gift made unlawful or ineffective by the second part of the said proviso (167-8).

Quarr whether the devise to the daughter-in-law was also invalid as being "to a stranger so as to exclude from succession any person belonging to any of the classes specified in S. 22 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869" within the meaning of the said proviso (168-9).

Quarre whether the testator had, by the first devise of Mahad H to his widow for her life, which in the event took effect, exhausted his testamentary power of disposition, and the bequest in favour of the daughter-in-law, and the gift over, were bad for that reason (160-7).(Lord Blanesburgh.) Quarre, whether the word "exclude" in the proviso to Sub-S. (2) of S. 18 of the Act ought to have a generous or a narrow signification attributed to it, and whether a bequest which merely delays the enjoyment of the estate by some one of the testator's kindred, but does not and cannot "exclude" such kindred "from succession" altogether is within the mischief provided against by the proviso (1689). -Stranger-Bequest to-1f invalid in any circumstances whatever.

Their Lordships feel that the words "to a stranger, etc." in the proviso to Sub-S. (2) of S. 18 of the Act are not strong enough to prevent a valid devise of the estate being made to a "stranger" in any circumstances whatever. If for instance, a testator was so unusually circumstanced that he left behind him no person belonging to any of the specified classes, their Lordships can see nothing which, under the proviso, would affect in such a case the validity of a devise to a stranger otherwise unimpeachable. To them it does not seen permissible as a mere matter of construction to treat the concluding words of the proviso as being no more than a definition of the word "stranger" (168.9). #### SUB-SETTLEMENT.

- Claim to-Onus on claimant.

The question was whether the appellant was entitled to a sub-settlement of Taluka B. The respondent, as the talook-dar of that property had those proprietary rights which were assured to talookdars of Oudh holding talookdar sunnuds by "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869," and the only question was whether the respondent, who alleged himself to be the Zamindar of Taluka B, was entitled to a sub-settlement under the terms of "The Oudh Sub-Settlement Act, 1866."

Held, that, in order to entitle the appellant to such a sub-settlement, it was necessary that he should prove that he, or some person under whom he claimed, had within the prescribed period held those lands as an under-proprietor under the talookdar or the predecessors of that ralookdar (82).

It was, indeed, contended that it was sufficient for him to show that he had been a proprietor of those lands by a title adverse to the talookdar, and that although he might have lost his right to engage for the Government revense under the peculiar laws that have prevailed in the province of Oudh since the reconquest of that province, it was to be presumed that, having once had the better title to the lands he had still a right to a sub-settlement. This broad proposition cannot be maintained (82-3). (Sir James W. Colvile.) SYUD MEER WAHID ALI v. RANEE SADHA BEBEE. (1875) 3 Suth. 82=R & J.'s No. 34 (Oudh).

RULE 13 OF RULES ATTACHED TO.

-Under-proprietary rights-Decree for, before det-Review of, after Act - Jurisdiction

On 2-2 1864, the predecessor-in-title of the defendants instituted a suit in the Court of the Settlement Assistant Commissioner against the then talukdar, praying for an under-proprietary settlement in the village held by him within the ambit of the taluq. Judgment was pronounced in the suit by the Assistant Settlement Officer, on March 15, 1864, and a permanent lease of the lands in suit was decreed to the plaintiff against the talukdar, the words "permanent lease" meaning "under-proprietary rights." That judgment was affirmed by the Settlement Commissioner and the Chief Commissioner.

After the passing of the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act of 1866, the talukdar presented under that Act a petition to the then Financial Commissioner for a review of the late Financial Commissioner's judgment.

On January 17, 1867, judgment was delivered, and the case was remanded to the Settlement Court for reinvestigation under the new rules framed under the Act on the ground that it did not appear from the judgments of the lower Courts that the possession of the predecessor-in-title of the defendants was "sufficiently continuous to entitle him to sub-settlement." Ultimately, on January 6, 1869, the same Financial Commissioner pronounced judgment, decreeing a farming lease to plaintiff (the predecessor-in-title of the defendants), he paying the Government demand plus 25 per cent, to the talukdar for a period of 30 years.

In a suit brought by the succeeding talukdar against the defendants at the expiration of the period of 30 years referred to above for declaration of title, held that the Financial Commissioner had jurisdiction to make the decree of January 6, 1869, and that it was a valid and binding decree. -Applicability and effect-Birt Shankallap and Khooshut Shankallap-Claim to-Maintainability.

Plaintiff made a claim to a settlement in virtue of his under-proprietary right, which he described as that of a "Birt Zemindar" in two villages and half of a third, alleging that the said villages had been granted as "Birt for maintenance" to him and his predecessors in estate, and had been held by them and him for a long time down to 1258 Fasli (1850-1), when he stated that he was forcibly ejected by the appellant.

The Settlement Officer, and the Commissioner, found that the plaintiff was entitled to the right he claimed, which was sometimes described as a "Hirt Shankaltap" right, sometimes as a "Shankallap" right (some kinds of Shankallap being almost identical with that of Birt, some being different from it), and an under-settlement was decreed to him,

Held that, on the findings of fact of the Courts below, the plaintiff was not excluded, by the words of S. 2 of Act XXVI of 1866, from the right of coming before the Court,

The effect of the finding of the Courts below is that the plaintiff did hold, not merely in the words of the section through privilege granted on account of services or by fasour of the talookdar," but by an under-proprietary right, which is distinguished from a holding through privilege or favour; that he was entitled to hold, not merely during the will of the talookdar, to which the latter part of the section appears to point, but in invitum; and their Lordships are of opinion that from the length of his holding which appears to be considerable, and the circumstances which have been found in the case, it may fairly be inferred that he held pucka or under-contract, or at all events under an arrangement from which a contract might be inferred (23). The respondent was the taluqular of an Oudh Taloka, which was taken under the management of the Government according to the provisions of the Oudh Talookdars' Relief Act 24 of 1870, from November, 1872. During the time the estate was under the operation of the said Act, the respondent executed in favour of the plaintiff a bond which was a mere hypothecation of the taluka which was then under management.

In view of the circumstances that the appellant in the court below was a minor and was incapable of exercising his right of appeal except through the manager, who himself made the order appealed from, and that the respondents in the court below (the appellants before their Lordships) had after the expiration of the period prescribed by S. 10 themselves prayed for a judicial determination of substantially the same questions as were raised by the appeal before their Lordships, they however declined to reverse the decision of the Commissioner (2045). Talukdars' Relief Act, XXIV of 1870-(Centd.)

S. 25-Escale under management-Succession to-Suit as to-Parties-Manager not impleaded, though propries or impleaded-Effect-Validity of judgment in mit inter parties.

M, an Oudh tajookdar, executed a will in favour of his wife constituting her the full representative of the taluk with power to appoint another heir to and representative of the talook. On M's death M's widow presented a petition under the Oudh Talookdars' Relief Act 24 of 1870, praying that the talook to which she had succeeded might be placed under the management of the Government, and an order was made on the petition appointing the Depoty

Commissioner of Fyzahad to be manager.

Subsequent to the order appointing a manager, a suit was instituted by the appellant, the daughter's son of M, in which a decree was made declaring that the will of M had been duly revoked by him in his lifetime, and that the appellant was entitled, under Act I of 1869, to succeed, as ab intestate, to the talookdari estate of M, M's widow, and the respondent, who had been appointed by her heir to the estate were defendants in that suit. The manager of the estate, appointed under the Oudh Talookdars' Relief Act, was not, however, made a party, and no objection was taken to the suit on the ground of his non-joinder.

In a suit subsequently brought by the respondent, raising the same issue upon the revocation of the will of M, Add that the omission to join the manager as a party to the prior suit did not affect the validity of the decree therein as between the appellant and the respondent (210).

The appointment of the manager did not vest the estate in him. It remained in M's widow as before. Nothing in the previous part of the Oudh Talookdars' Relief Act takes away the jurisdiction of the Courts in suits relating to succession, and S. 25 of the Act expressly declares that it is not taken away. The section does not enact or purport to enact that judgments given in such suits shall be void as between the parties contesting the right to succession (210). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) DHURM-PUTR—PALUK-PUTR OR—NATURE OF ADOPTION.

-Evidence.

Besides the testimony with respect to the adoption, there were circumstances that took place, respecting which there was no doubt and no contradiction, namely, that three days after the death of the deceased there was a meeting of the caste, and at that meeting there were present, among other persons, two cousins of the alleged adopted son. They, as being the descendants of one of the three brothers, of whom the deceased was one, were present at that meeting; and the priest being there, the tunderooste was read, and it was read, admittedly, in the name of the person who claimed to be the adopted son.

There was some contradiction between the witnesses as to anything being said about the adoption being Paluk or not. Some of the witnesses said he was expressly declared to be Paluk, or adopted son generally; others said nothing was said; but all agreed in this, that no remark was made and no mention was made of its being Dhurm-putr. The deceased's widow herself was manifestly present, and she made no objection to the tunderooste being read in general terms. It was said by one of the witnesses, no distinction was made as to the mode of reading, whether it was Dhurm-putr or Paluk; but inasmuch as an adoption generally would imply that the adopted son is the heir of all, and the adoption by Dhurm-putr is an exception, one should expect, if there was any exception made, it would be notified.

Again, no writing was produced, or pretended to have been given, as an acknowledgment by the respondent that be was merely adopted as Dhurm-putr. It, however, appeared that there were instances where a writing was taken in the suit family itself, and that there was another instance where it having been given, it was notified at the Parsee Church.

Held, affirming the Court below, that, under all the above-mentioned circumstances, there was very strong evidence to show that there was, in point of fact, a general adoption of the respondent. (Mr. Justice Bosanquet.) HOMABAEE 2: PUNJEABHAEE DOSABHAEE.

Fire temple at Rangoon.

-Use of -Participation in ceremonies performed at-Right of of different kinds of Parsecs.

In 1859 the Government granted a piece of land at Rangoon to two Parsee trustees upon trust to maintain it " as a cemetery and to the free use of persons of the Parsi denomination," and power was reserved to the Government to appoint new trustees, and to revoke the trust in case the land was applied to other uses. In 1868 another similar grant was made "upon trust to build and maintain upon the land a temple for the use of the Parsi population," and power was again reserved to the Government to nominate new trustees, and to revoke the grant if the temple was not erected within a year. Both grants were renewed in 1882. and schemes were subsequently drawn up for the management of the temple and burial ground, that for the latter providing that it " was to be used for burying persons who shall at his or her death be actually professing the Zoroas-tran religion and no other;" and that "no one shall be taken to be actually professing the Zoroastrian religion who has not been duly invested with the Sudra and Kusti, in accordance with the rites prescribed by that religion.

In 1915, a person, whose father was a Goanese Christian, and mother a Parsi, was converted to or initiated into the Zoroastrian religion, and began to attend the temple, and, within the sacred precincts thereof, to face the sacred fire and to perform the ceremonies in common with other worshippers.

In an action instituted by certain members of the Parsi community against the convert for an injunction restraining her from using the temple or attending its ceremonies, keld, that the benefits of the trust created by the said documents were confined to persons who possessed the double qualification of Zoroastrians and racial Parsis, and that Parsis who ceased to be Zoroastrians had no claim to the benefit of the said trust.

The Parsi community had grown up to be such a distinct body, and admissions into it from outside had been so very rare, that at the time when these grants at Rangoon were made the Government must have intended that the temple should be for the benefit of professing members of the Parsi community, i.e., racial Parsis or people deemed after a long lapse of ages to be racial Parsis. The testator died in 1908, his widow predeceased him; and J died childless in 1913 leaving a widow surviving him. I's widow instituted the suit out of which the appeal to the Privy Council arose for a declaration that as representative of her husband she was entitled to a half of f's foursevenths share of the residuary estate of the testator under Ss. 3 and 6 of the Parsi Intestate Succession Act. 1865.

Held, affirming the Court below, that, on the right construction of the will, the testator intended that f's widow should be entirely excluded from any share in the distribution, whether as heir of her husband or otherwise; and that the testator did not intend to include f as one of his "heirs" as that term was used in para. 8 of his will.

The testator intended that the only interest in his property which I should take or have was a right of maintenance under para, 6 during the lifetime of the testator's wife if she survived the testator, and a life-interest under para. 7 in the testator's property undisposed of under the earlier paragraphs of the will, and that he did not intend to include / as one of his "heirs" as that term is used in para. 8 (330).

The words "excluding the widow of J from getting any share in such distribution" in cl. 8 of the will would apply to funds coming to J's widow as representative of J, in the event of / being included in the class of heirs to the testator. There is no reason why the said words should not have their natural meaning, and to limit them to the event of I predeceasing the testator is to introduce a fimitation not to be found in the terms of the will (327-8). EXECUTION OF -ADOPTION BY TESTATOR SHORTLY AFTER WILL AND IMMEDIATELY BEFORE HIS DEATH.

If the adoption before the death of the testator (a Parsee) is clearly made out and established at the time that the adoption in this case was alleged to have taken place, namely, almost immediately before the death of the testator, it would render the execution of a will by him a very short time previous to that, extremely improbable. In such a case very clear proof will be required to establish the existence of the will. (Mr. Justice Botanquet.) HOMA-BAEE P. PUNJEABHAEE DOSABHAEE. (1835) 5 W. A compromise decree of 1901 in a partition suit between an uncle and a nephew allotted properties A to the uncle and properties II to the nephew. Another compromise decree of 1908 in another suit in 1904 between them merely substituted A for B and B for A. The decree of 1908, after providing that the one set of properties should be changed for the other, provided, by cl. 7, as follows :-

'That if the plaintiff or the defendant No. 1 has sold at a time when he was in possession under the decree of 1901 any of the said properties respectively allotted to him he do pay to the other party the consideration money received by such sale, and if any property have been mortgaged or otherwise encumbered, the party mortgaging or encumbering it do redeem the property or otherwise indemnify the other party of any loss that the latter may sustain.

Held that, by virtue of the said clause 7 in the decree of 1908, each party was to hand over to his opponent, so to speak, intact those lands which he got under the decree of 1901, and, if he could not do it, then he was liable for damages, and that the rights of one party did not depend upon whether the dealings with the property by his opponent constituted an encumbrance or not. In September, 1822, a suit was brought in the Seprene Court of Calcutta on the equity side by I, one of the son of R, deceased, and K, son and heir of another deceased son of R, against the other members of their family, which was an undivided Hindu family, to have a partition of the immoveable estate of R, subject to the provisions of his ril On the 22nd of April, 1823, by an order of the Suprime Court, Commissioners were appointed to make the partition On the 28th of June, 1825, the Commissioners made their report, and thereby certified that they had allotted to A. with other property, a portion of tenanted ground called Sontose's Garden, containing by admeasurement about 4 bighas and thirteen cottahs. On the death of K and his widow, C became the heir of K, and entitled to his estate In August, 1885, C brought a suit in the Supreme Court, in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, against the respond dents for possession of 4 bighas 13 cottahs of Sontoe's Garden, as having been allotted to K by the decree in the partition suit. The defendant pleaded as to portion of the land, that it had been included in such allotment by mistake of the Commissioners. There was, however, no ground for assuming that the members of R's family, who were parties to the suit for partition, were under any mistake as to the property which belonged to their father, or that there and any error or want of due care on the part of the Commissioners whose proceedings appeared to have been perfectly regular,

An inam grant was made to A and B and their male descendants in perpetuity. A died leaving three daughters only, and B died leaving male descendants. The daughters of A instituted a suit against the male descendants of B for a partition and delivery to them of their share of the estate covered by the grant in right of their father. Their Lordships held that the daughters of A were not entitled to a partition of the estate. They, however, found that there was a binding prior decision between the parties to the effect that the plaintiffs were entitled during life to a defined share of the annual income of the estate. To obviate further litigation between the parties, their Lordships, therefore, added a declaration in the decree that by virtue of the decree in the prior suit each of the plaintiffs was during her life and as against the defendant and his successors in interest in the property in dispute entitled to the share of the income defined by the prior decree, with liberty after each year to apply to have the amount of such income determined by further proceedings in the suit and declared in a further decree (304). defendant filed suits in the High Court of Bombay in the name of the 1st defendant and himself, as surviving partners of the firm, to recover debts due to the firm. The amounts realised in the said suits were by consent of defendants 1 and 2 paid over to the 3rd defendant, a receiver appointed by Court, to be held by him until further order. The Administrator-General of Bombay, as representing the estate of H, filed a suit in the High Court of Bombay, against defendants 1 to 3 praying for a declaration that the moneys in the Receiver's (3rd defendant's) hands belonged to the plaintiff, and, if necessary, for an account of the partnership. Leave to sue was obtained by the plaintiff under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865. It was contended that the Bombay High Court had no jurisdiction to order accounts of a firm in Sind and Behrin, and that neither the fact that the amounts sued for were recovered from debtors living in Bombay, nor the fact that the amounts were in the Receiver's hands, gave that court jurisdiction.

The Court below (High Court on its appellate side) held that the High Court had jurisdiction, because a part of the cause of action at least arose within its jurisdiction and leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent had been obtained.

On appeal their Lordships affirmed the decision of the Court below that the jurisdiction of the Court was not limited to the assets recovered in Bombay.

What is the cause of action alleged? It is that the 2nd defendant is endeavouring under cloak of his position as surviving partner to get into his hands a sum of money within the jurisdiction of the Court, nay in the hands of its officer, with a view to deprive the representatives of his deceased partner of the fund, and to employ it for his own purposes. That is a most substantial part of the cause of action—Per The High Court in appeal. (Lord Macrosphies.) BHUGWANDAS MITHARAM v. RIVETT CARNAC.

Though the existence of such a partnership was denied, not a scrap of evidence was produced on behalf of the appellant to prove an agreement admitting her as a partner in the place of her husband, and all that appeared was that the widow got a mere allowance of Rs. 51 a month and that her husband's share continued, even after his death, to be dealt with in the books of the partnership.

- Joint venture in business-Agreement for. A and B entered into an agreement for the stated purpose of doing business in partnership in brown sugar from Mauritius to Hong Kong. Under the agreement, each partner after consultation, was to buy sugar in his own name giving to the other a delivery order for half the quantity. When sufficient sugar had been purchased it was to be shipped to Hong Kong, separate invoices for half the quantity being made out separately. Separate accounts of sales were to be kept, but the profit or loss on the entire transaction was to be divided equally. Under the agreement A and B were each to draw bills for the sugar purchased, which, under certain circumstances, were to be accepted by the appellant before their Lordships. Under the agreement, A and B bought sugar and in each case bills in respect of the price were drawn by the individual purchaser and accepted by appellant, to whom the sugar was consigned. When the bills became due A retired those which he had drawn, but B having become insolvent, failed to meet those drawn by him, and they were discharged by appellant as acceptor. Appellant thereupon sued A and B

The criterion to be applied to see whether a transaction is or is not a partnership transaction is stated in the well-known judgment of Lord Ellenborough thus: If a number of persons agree to share in goods to be purchased, and in consequence of that agreement one of them go into the market and make the purchase, it is the same as if all the names had been announced to the seller, and therefore all are liable for the value of them. He distinguishes the case in which each of several persons buys his separate parcel of goods which are afterwards mixed in a common adventure. Profits of trade—Participation in -Agreement for.

It is now established that, although a right to participate in the profits of trade is a strong test of partnership, and that there may be cases where, from such perception alone it may, as a presumption, not of law but of fact, be inferred; yet that whether that relation does or does not exist must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties (102).

It may well be, that where there is an agreement to share the profits of a trade, and no more, a contract of partner-ship may be inferred, because there is nothing to show that any other was contemplated; but such an inference does not arise in a case where another and different contract is shown to have been intended, viz., one of loan and security (104). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) MOLLWO, MARCH & CO. v. THE COURT OF WARDS. (1872) Sup. I. A. 86 = 10 B. L. R. 312 = 18 W. B. 384 = 3 Sar. 168 = 9 Moo. P. C. (N. S.) 214 = 2 Suth. 715.

-It appears to have been at one time understood that some decisions of the English Courts had established, as a positive rule of law, that participation in the net profits of a business made the participant liable as a partner to third persons. The rule was evidently an arbitrary one, and subsequent discussion has led to the rejection of the reason for it as unsound. Whilst it was supposed to prevail, much hardship arose from its application, and a distinction, equally arbitrary, was established between a right to participate in profits generally " as such," and a right to a payment by way of salary or commission "in proportion" (to use the words of Lord Eldon) " to a given quantum of the profits" (101). This distinction has always been admitted to be thin, but it may be observed that the supposed rule itself was arbitrary in the sense of being imposed by law and of being founded on an assumption opposed in many cases to the real relation of the parties; and when the law thus creates a rule of liability and a distinction both equally arbitrary, the distinction which protects from liability is entitled to as much weight as the rule which imposes it (102). AGREEMENT ON, FOR FIRM'S BUSINESS AND LIABI-LITIES BEING TAKEN OVER BY ONE OF PARTNERS.

- Creditors not parties to-Effect of agreement when, and upon partners inter se.

When on the dissolution of a partnership an agreement is arrived at by which one of the partners takes over the firm's assets and makes himself personally responsible for its debts and liabilities, a creditor of the firm who is sola party to the dissolution agreement is not affected by it. The direct joint liability of each of the partners to such creditor remains entirely unaffected by the execution of such and ment. But by that agreement, the partner who took out the firm's assets and liabilities, as between himself and each of his former partners, becomes solely responsible for the firm's debts to that creditor, and each of the other former partners becomes entitled to an indemnity from the partner who took over the liabilities against all liability as a former partner of his in respect of that debt. Each of the other partners is entitled to have that right of indemnity declared and enforced (by an order on the partner took over the debts, for example, to pay off the debt) if the right were disputed or the obligation neglected. But each of the other partners is entitled to no more. He cannot recover the debts from the partners who took over the liabilities unless and until he has himself paid it. (Les Blanesburgh.) business, which was held in partnership between G and L. Differences of opinion arose between the ladies, and in that year, on the advice of friends, the family business was divided into two shops, one of which was carried on by the respondent for her own profit, the other being in like manner carried on by B for herself and the appellant. A complete and apparently exact division was then made of the stock-in-trade, book debts, and other assets of the business. The parties, however, continued to live in the family house, though whether they messed together was not clear, until 1894, when the final rupture took place, and the respondent went to reside elsewhere.

In a suit brought by the appellant alleging that the division in 1889 was only an arrangement for management only to avoid quarrels and as a matter of convenience, held, on the evidence, that the transaction of 1889 was a dissolution of the partnership theretofore subsisting between the appellant and the respondent, as heir and representative of G and that the arrangement of 1889 was not, as alleged by the appellant, of a merely temporary character, but was intended to be a permanent family settlement, and in the circumstances could not be impeached by him, and was binding upon him (138). Held that by no fair and reasonable intendment could it be inferred from the whole of the agreement that the partners relinquished their right of dissolving or applying to have the company dissolved if the business could not be carried on at a profit, or that they agreed, if they did exercise that right, to pay the app flant compensation (208). dent accepted that position. Similarly the 2nd appellant gave up the work in March 1912, and the respondent accepted that position also, and performed what other work was required, either himself or through his agents, until the completion of the contract in April, 1914. In a suit by the two appellants for a declaration that the partnership terminated from 31st March 1914, with the usual and proper accounts and enquiries, held that the partnership came to an end only by efflux of time and that the appellants were entitled both to the declaration they sought as to the period of dissolution and to the account of profits earned.

The view of the appellate Court is that the partnership was ended by the 1st appellant in October, 1911; that the 1st appellant then gave up the work and the respondent accepted that position. But this is not sufficient to determine the partnership. The partnership when constituted was a partnership between three people, and could be dissolved only by agreement between all the partners. It is not suggested that there was any such agreement. The rights, therefore, given to the respondent by the action of the 1st appellant were not exercised, and the partnership continued. The same result occurred when the 2nd appellant himself declined to go on. (Lord Buckmaster.) KRISHNAMA-CHARIAR v. SANKAMA SAH.

AND MAKING OF FINAL ACCOUNT.

When in a partnership mutual accounts cease to be rendered and a final account showing division of both capital and revenue is made out the presumption is that there is a dissolution as at the definite date of the year in account thus closed.

In a suit for the winding up of a partnership in which the plaintiffs alleged their family had a share, it appeared that in 1891 there was a division in respect of some other family property and that in respect of the partnership also a final account was taken in that year and that there was no further rendering of yearly accounts as was previously the case, or any interposition of the family in the partnership business. It also appeared that sometime in 1901 the dispute between the plaintiffs and the defendant was arranged by a letter signed by the plaintiffs in which there was reference to verbal arrangement by which they agreed to divide properties acquired with the partnership funds equally. Defendant's case was that there was a dissolution and a settlement of accounts in 1891 and that the plaintiffs' claim was barred. Held that the dissolution of the partnership in 1891 was made out and the suit having been instituted more than three years from that date was barred by limitation under Article 106 of the Limitation Act. -Final decree in-Appeal from-Remand for further account of particular transaction-When will not be made.

On an appeal from the final decree in a suit for disclition of partnership and consequential relief, the question was whether the case ought to be remanded for taking a further account as to a particular transaction. The transaction was a purchase of certain plots made in 1900 for the benefit of the 1st defendant (one of the partners) with perchase-money undoubtedly derived from the firm funds. Though the litigation had been pending for a number of years, the first suggestion of the right to the account chised was made only in the course of the argument of the appeal before the High Court. The learned Judges of the High Court considered it was then too late to ask the ist defendant's representatives to trace the particular item through the accounts.

Their Lordships concurred in the view of the High Court more especially because the case was not one where it could be said to be patent on the face of the accounts that the 1st defendant's liability to the firm for the purchase money had not been discharged.

No doubt there is no single entry in the accounts recoving the discharge of the amount in question, but the accounts are consistent with it and are far from indicating on their face that the liability still exists, more especially when regard is had to the balances brought forward each year and the annual comparison and adjustment of accounts as between the two branches of the firm up to March 100A. To open up accounts thus compared and adjusted from year to year after this lapse of time would require a very strong case, and that certainly has not been made out. (Sir Laurence Jenkins.) -Preliminary secree in-What amounts to a.

In a suit for the taking of partnership accounts and for that purpose to have various matters decided by the Court, one of the points in dispute was whether or not certain persons were partners. The trial Judge, by his formal adjudication, "declared" that the partnership in question was dissolved as from a date prior to suit, and then "ordered and decreed" that-It is referred to the assistant referee of this Court to take the following account and to make, inter alia, the following inquiries, that is to say:-"(1) To inquire who were the partners who were entitled to share in the assets and goodwill of the said partnership business; and (2) to take an account of the dealings of the parties with the assets of the said partnership business."

Held that the adjudication was a "decree within the meaning of S. 2, sub-S. (2) of C. P. C. of 1908," and that it was a "preliminary decree" within S. 97 of the Code (94-5).

The adjudication itself began by declaring that the partnership was dissolved as from a certain date, and thus in limine settled rights between the parties. This declaration was the foundation for all subsequent accounts and proceedings, which were merely incidental thereto and consequential thereon. It matters not whether the instrument of partnership fixed the dissolution at a date which had passed before the suit began, or whether the parties had agreed to a dissolution or agreed in submitting to a dissolution by the Court, or whether the Court decreed a dissolution for cause shown before it after a litis contestatio. The declaration when so made was what the Court's adjudication and indeed the appellant's own case call it, a decree. The adjudication was in substance a decree; it did not cease to be such because a subordinate part of it, if correctly made, might have been made separately as an order. It conclusively determined the rights of the parties in regard to certain, and those essential, matters involved in the suit (95). (Lord Sumner.) AHMED MUSAJI SALEJI 2. HASHIM EBRAHIM SALEJI. -Applicability of-Limitations.

The case (in which the question was whether, by an agreement between one P and certain persons called the Watsons, P became, at least as regards third persons, a partner with the Watsons) has been argued in the Courts of India and at their Lordships' bar, on the basis that the law of England relating to partnerships should govern the decision of it. Their Lordships agree that, in the attence of any law or well-established custom existing in India of the subject, English law may properly be resorted to it mercantile affiairs for principles and rules to guide the courts in that country to a right decision. But whilst this is so, it should be observed that in applying them the usages of trade and habits of business of the people of India, so far as they may be peculiar, and differ from the in England, ought to be borne in mind (100). If a partnership has been dissolved and the accounts have been wound up and each partner has paid what he has to contribute to the debts of the partnership and received his share of the profits, the mutual rights and obligations having been thus all discharged, and then it turns out afterwards that there was some item to the credit of the partnership which was either forgotten or treated as valueless by reason of the supposed insolvency of the debtor or for any other cause, which item afterwards becomes of value and falls in, it ought to be divided between the partners in proportion to their shares in the original partnership. There is no reason why one should have it more than the other (190). In all cases where for any reason it did occur that after the dissolution and complete winding up of a partnership an asset which had not been taken into account fell in it ought to be divided between the ex-partners or their representatives according to their shares in the former partner-ship (191). BILL IN FIRM'S NAME DRAWN BY A.

-Liability of other partners on-Trading partner-thip-Sleeping partner-Liability of.

Every one of the partners in a mercantile firm of ordinary trading partnership is liable upon a bill drawn by a partner in the recognised trading name of the firm for a transaction incident to the business of the firm, although his name does not appear on the face of the instrument, and although he be a sleeping and secret partner. In order to take a case out of these principles of the general law, it must be shown that the holder of the the bill knew at the time he received it that the transaction was the private affair of a single partner.

A contract entered into by a Railway company and P to supply the company with Railway Sleepers, was partly performed by P, before he entered into a partnership with R under the name of Firm of P. and Co., after which it was completed. Before the partnership, P had entered into a sub-contract with H and M, to supply the sleepers, and, after the partnership, drew bills in the name of P. and Co., payable at Calcutta in favour of H. M. in part-payment of their account. These bills were dishonoured. In an action brought against P. and Co., the evidence showed, that R was aware of P's contract which was subsisting and completed after the partnership. Held that R, as a member of P and Co., was liable in the absence of proof by him that the holder of the bills knew at the time he received them that the transaction was a private contract of P, and not one with a partnership. - Shares on - Arrangement new as to-Prof of.

The appeal related to a banking business which was carried on in Kangoon from 1863 to 1878 by Chidambaram Chetty and others. The parties were agreed as to the terms on which the co-partnership existed from 1863 to 1869. They were further agreed that in the latter year an account was made up showing the profits which had been realised during the six preceding years, and bringing out as at that date the sums of capital and profits belonging to each of the partners. The controversy between them had reference to the period from May 1869 until January 1878, when, in consequence of the death of Chidambaram Chetti, the co-partnership was dissolved and had to be wound up.

The plaintifis in their plaint averred that it had been agreed between the partners that after the 10th of May 1809 each share of the business should be of the amount and value of Rs. 4,000; that Chidambaram Chetti represented by defendants 1 to 3, should have four shares that Armanialai Chetti, the 1st plaintiff, and the 2nd and 3rd plaintiffs, should have 21 shares; that the 4th defendant, Arunachellam, who was afterwards made a plaintiff in the suit, should have 1; shares; and that a small part of a share should be set aside for charitable purposes. It was further alleged that the business had been carried on until its close upon that agreement; and the plaintiffs claimed to have the partnership accounts ascertained and stated on that footing accordingly.

The defendants maintained that no such change took place in the year 1869 in the arrangements and agreements of the partners as the plaintiffs alleged, but that what & cured in 1869 was merely that an account showing the shares of capital and accruing profits of each partner, after debiting their respective drawings was made up, the profit being only apportioned, and allowed to remain as capital without any further change being made in the partners interests, and that capital was not drawn out or added to by any of the partners.

The Court below (the Recorder of Rangoon) by its judgment and decree gave full effect to the plaintiff's chim.

Held, affirming the Court below, that its judgment was sound, and in accordance with the great preponderant of the evidence. (Mr. Shand.) MUTIA CHETTI P. SUBRI-(1891) 18 C. 616=6 Sar. 49. MANIEM CHETTI.

- Compromise on dissolution by which latter under took to pay pertion of debt-Farlure to pay in pursuance of Payment by former to satisfy deere; obtained on debt - Liability of latter to contribute-Pobt, held not binding on latter fartner in suit brought thereon-Effect.

L, one of the partners of a firm, brought a partition suit against the other partner. B. following on a dissolution of the partnership in which the Court gave effect to a compromise which the two parties themselves had effected. There had been a mortgage granted by B in favour of N which purported to convey, as security for the debt which was thereby constituted, the whole of the partnership property. It was a moot point, however, between the purtneras to whether B had in truth any right to subject the whole of the partnership property to the debt, or whether he was not in fact only able to hurden his own share. One of the terms of the arrangement which was made binding between the parties in the judgment pronounced was that L should pay to N a sum of Rs. 8 000 and odd, and that B shoul! free the other parties' portion of the property from the mortgage. L did not pay the amount, and accordingly A' brought a suit on his mortgage in the course of which it was held by the Privy Council that the mortgage only bound B's share and not the whole partner-hip property. B paid the sum of Rs. 8.000 and odd payable by L to A under the compromise, discharged the mortgage, and sued L for contribution. L pl-aded that he was not liable because B never did free the other part of the property from the mortgage, the same having been freed by the judgment of the Privy Council in the mort gage suit, and not by anything done by B. Held, over-ruling the plea, that L was bound by the compromise.

L might have paid the money direct to N; he did not pay it, and B had in consequence to pay it to him. Accordingly, to make good the terms of the compromise. L must pay it to B. (Lord Dunctin.) SETH RAMLAL v. NAR SINGDAS. (1914) 2 L. W. 163=19 C. W. N. 193=

Test. Settlement of account-Arbitration and Award-

On disputes arising between two partners, who were residing in different places, one of the partners sent a representative of his armed with a power of attorney which did not authorise the representative to appoint an arbitrator on behalf of his employer or to submit disputes to arbitration in accordance with a clause in the articles of partnership, but which did authorise him, in discussion with the other partner, to settle the accounts of the partnership, and to collect what money he could. Certain proceedings took place at a place called Meidi between the representative and the other partner, and the question for decision was whether those proceedings amounted to an arbitration of a dispute which had arisen between the two partners, followed by an award pronounced by arbitrators between them, or they were in truth an adjustment of the partnership accounts between the respresentative and the other pariner, taking the form of a settled account and followed by such a delivery of goods in stock and cash in hand as constituted a discharge of the balance shown upon the account so stated.

Held, affirming the High Court, that, on a true construction of the document evidencing the proceedings, it constituted a direct settlement of account of all questions arising between the partners, and did not amount to an arbitration and award. Even in a case in which the subject-matter of a partnership is as precarious as a mining speculation, it is a matter of inference to be drawn, from the facts of each case, whether or no there has been abandonment by a partner of his interest in the partnership or loss of such interest by laches. Proof that the partner declined to advance more money for partnership purposes and left with occasional intervention the management to a co-partner was held insufficient to show abandonment or loss by laches (193).

LENDER IF AND WHEN A.

-Two persons, known as the Watsons, who carried on business in partnership, entered into an agreement with Rajah P on 27-8-1863, whereby in consideration of money already advanced, and which might be thereafter advanced by the Rajah to them, the Watsons agreed to carry on their business subject to the control of the Rajah in several important particulars. They further agreed to and in fact did, hand over to him "as security" the title deeds of certain tea plantations, and they also agreed, that "as forther security" all their other property, landed or otherwise, including their stock in trade, should be answerable for the debt due to him.

Cl. 10 of the agreement provided: "In consideration of the said advances made, and the liability incurred as aforesaid by the Rajah, and in consideration of any future advances which may be made by him, the firm agrees that he shall receive from them a commission of 20 o/o on all net profits made by the firm from time to time, commencing from the 1st of May 1862, or until such time as the whole amount of the debt due to him shall be paid off, and the liability so incurred by him as aforesaid shall be wholly extinguished." Cl. 13 provided as follows: in addition to the said commission pay to the Rajah interest at the rate of 12 o/o per annum upon all cash advances which have been or are to be hereafter made by him to the firm, and shall also pay to the banks all discount and interest now as hereafter payable on the said acceptances."

The agreement was not signed by the Rajah, but he was undoubtedly an assenting party to it. Though the arrange ment conferred upon the Rajah large powers of control, and empowered him to take possession of the consignments and their proceeds, in addition to the commission on net profits. in point of fact, the Rajah never received possession of any of the property or moneys of the firm, nor any of the proceeds of the business, and did not in fact receive any commission. He knew little of the details of the business, and he availed himself only in a slight degree of the powers of control conferred upon him by the agreement.

Held that the Rajah was not liable for the debts of the firm of Watson & Co., either on the ground that by the agreement of 27-8-1863 he became a partner with the Watsons, or on the ground that, if he was not "a true part ner", the Watsons were his agents in carrying on the business, and the debts in question were contracted by the

the parties did not intend to create a partnership, and the true relation under the agreement was that of creditor and debtors. There is no sufficient ground for holding that the business was carried on for the Rajah as principal, in as other character. The agreement, in terms, and, in sabstance, is founded on the relation of creditor and debtors, a

Their Lordships epinion in this case is founded of their belief that the contract the construction and effect of which are in question is really and in substance what it pro fesses to be, viz., one of loan and security between delters and their creditor. RETIRING PARTNER-LIABILITY OF, TO FIRM'S OLD CUSTOMER.

-Publication of retirement in necespapers -- No actual notice to old customer-Effect-Contract Act-S. 264-Eff. et of.

Appellant was a partner of a firm which, along with another firm, granted in respect of a loan a promissory note in favour of the respondent, who was an old customer, Subsequently the firm dissolved partnership and the appellant retired. The firm continued to do business under the same name and by the deed of dissolution a certain interest in the business was secured to the appellant though he was no longer a partner. Thereafter, the old promissory. note was cancelled and a new promissory-note given by the two firms for the same sum, the rate of interest being, however, higher. The retirement of the appellant from the from was advertised in the Bombay Gazette and in four other newspapers but no intimation was sent or conveyed in any way to the respondent.

Held that the appellant was liable on the second pro-

The appellant founded his non-liability on the terms of S. 264 of the Contract Act. He argued that "persons" in that section includes both old and new customers, and that though the section is expressed in a negative form there must be extracted therefrom the positive proposition that persons will be affected by a dissolution of which public notice has been given. Against that it is urged that the section is merely negative and must be strictly limited to what it says, which is the effect of the dissolution of the firm on the rights of persons dealing with it, but not on the liabilities of the firm to the persons so dealing. If this were a new statute which was to be construed for the first time, there would be great force in the appellant's argument. But the question was settled against the contention of the appellant as long ago as 1882, and, in view of the ambiguity of the expression used in the section, their Lordships do not think they would be justified to give effect to a view which would upset what has been considered by the commercial community as the law for such a long period. SERVANT OR AGENT REMUNERATED BY SHARE OF PROFITS OR A.

-In December 1910, the Corporation of Madras invited tenders for a contract to mend roads and supply the necessary material. Negotiations took place between the two appellants and the respondent as to the best means by which the tender for the contract might be put forward and the resulting profits divided between them. It was arranged that a lease of certain quarries from which the metal would be obtained should be taken from the corporation in the name of the 1st appellant who should then transfer it to the respondent, the tender for the work being made in the name of the respondent. This arrangement was put in writing and its terms appeared in a letter which was signed by the respondent on 30th December, 1910, was addressed to the two appellants, and was as follows :-

In respect of the work to be sanctioned in my name in the tender which is going to be given in the year 1911, by the Municipality the advance and the money required therefor should be supplied by me alone. By another Act of the Imperial Parliament of 1900, the railways and other property of the defendant company were transferred to and vested in the Secretary of State in Council of India as and from 30th June 1900. On 21st December, 1900, an agreement was made between the Secretary of State in Council and the defendant Company, the opening recital of which stated that it had been agreed between the parties that the defendant Company should maintain, manage, and work the Great Indian Peninsula system on the terms thereinafter mentioned. Provisions followed which were intended to secure the carrying into effect of the recited agreement for the maintenance, management, and working of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway System, The agreement, however, contained a clause under which the surplus arising from excess of receipts over payments was to belong as to nineteen equal twentieth parts thereof to the Secretary of State and as to one equal twentieth part thereof to the defendant,

On a question arising as to whether stores purchased and imported by the defendant. Company into India for the use of the undertaking were exempt from Customs duties under S. 20, of the Sea Customs Act VIII of 1878, on the ground that the goods were, at the time of the importation, goods belonging to Government within the proviso to that section, it was found that the money for the purchase of the Stores in question was supplied by the Secretary of State, Held, that the defendant ( ompany purchased and imported the Stores into India merely as the agent for the Secretary of State, and that the goods were goods belonging to Government and were therefore exempt from customs duties.

'In respect of a contract with the Corporation of Madras which was to run for three years from April, 1911, the two appellants and the respondent entered into a partnership on the terms, inter alia, that the appellants were to do all the work and have stated shares in the profits. The 1st appellant gave up the work in October, 1911, and the respondent accepted that position. Similarly the 2nd appellant gave up the work in March, 1912, and the respondent accepted that position also, and performed what other work was required, either himself or through his agents, until the completion of the contract in April, 1914.

In a suit by the two appellants for a dissolution of the partnership and for accounts, held that, in taking the account of profits earned, a proper allowance ought to be made to the respondent for the fact that owing to the refusal of the appellants to perform their obligation under the partnership agreement, the business was continued by him from the 31st October, 1911, without the assistance of the 1st appellant, and from the 31st March, 1912, without the assistance of the 2nd appellant.

The appellants alleged indeed that as from the date when they ceased working there was little more work to do, that the work really depended upon the initial organisation of the whole enterprise and that when this was once done, the matter could easily proceed. This may or may not be the fact and it is quite possible that services rendered during the first 12 months of the partnership may be of greater value than those rendered during the remaining portion of the time. But the claim of the plaintiffs for an account of the profits without a proper allowance being made for the fact that their services were deliberately withheld, is a claim which cannot be maintained. Expiry of term—Dissolution before—Suit for— Maintainability—Grounds—Business could not be carried on except at a loss if one—Decree for dissolution—Discretion as to—Appeal—Interference in.

A partner's claim to a decree for dissolution rests, in its origin, not on contract, but on his inherent right to invoke the protection of the court on equitable grounds in spite of the terms in which the rights and obligations of the partners may have been regulated and defined by the partnership contract (65).

It is not any contravention of S. 252 of the Contract Act for a partner to seek a dissolution or for the court to decree it on the ground that the business of the partnership could only be carried on at a loss, though the partnership agreement contemplates the continuance of the partnership beyond the date at which the suit is instituted (65). It is to meet that precise predicament that the court's power to decree dissolution is conferred by sub-S. (6) of S. 254 of the Contract Act (66).

In a case in which a partnership agreement for the supply of stone for the construction of a dock provided that the partnership should continue until the completion of the supply for the works, one of the partners sued for a dissolution before that event and established that the business could only be carried on at a loss. The trial judge, in the exercise of his discretion, passed a decree for dissolution in plaintiff's favour. But his decree was reversed on appeal.

Held that, the trial judge not having acted capriciously or in disregard of any legal principle in the exercise of his discretion, there was no sufficient ground for disturbing his decree (66). (Sir Laturence Jenkins.) RFHMAT-UN-NISSA BEGAM 2. PRICE. (1917) 45 I. A. 61 =

There was a parinership carried on between the defendant-appellant and one F. F died on 3-8-1915. Although the partnership terminated on the death of F, the same business was carried on. In a suit brought by the represen tatives of F against the appellant in order that proper accounts might be taken, it was found that accounts had already been taken in the partnership, up to some date in 1913, and that it was not necessary to re-open them. The first court ordered that a further account should be taken up to the date of the death of F, but for some reason, no order was made for taking any subsequent accounts.

The appellate Court made an order :- "that accounts be taken of the profits of the business, since the death of F up to the date when the final decree is made, all just allowance. including fair remuneration to be allowed in favour of the defendant for managing the business. And it is further ordered that the plaintiffs, as representatives of F. will be entitled to the same share, as F would have taken, if the partnership had not been dissolved, and the profits will be assessed on the basis of what may be found due to F, at the time of his death."

Held that the order of the appellate Court was a proper order to make.

The order as made is in the proper form, in leaving all matters of account within the discretion of the Commissioner, subject to the direction that all just allowance should be made, including fair remuneration for management of the business and to the further order that the respondents, as representatives of F, will be entitled to the same share. as F would have taken, if the partnership had not been dissolved. The business is to be regarded, up to the date of the final decree, as a continuing business, although F died in 1915. (Lord Parmeer.) HAJI HEDAVETULLAP, MA-HOMED KAMIL. (1923) 19 L. W. 425=

Held that the proper decree to be passed in the case was to direct an account to be taken of the partnership dealings and transactions, to inquire what was due to the estate of the deceased partner in respect of her share at the time of her death and how the amount due to her estate had been dealt with, and, if it appeared that such amount or any part thereof had been employed in the business continued by the surviving partners, to direct the accounts of such business to be taken. Where under partnership articles it was provided that in the event of a partner dying or becoming insane, etc., during the term of the partnership, the surviving or remaining partner would pay to the representatives of the partner so dying, etc., a share of the "net annual profits" of the partnership business, held that the net annual profits, by which the amount of the sum to be paid by the surviving partner was to be measured, would be ascertained by deducting from the receipts and earnings of the business such outgoings and ordinary husiness expenses as were under the partnership articles or by the practice of the partners so deducted during the partnership, the business being for this purpose treated as a continuation of the partnership business. A payment, however, which under the partnership articles ceased with the dissolution of the partnership could not be properly deducted.

-Validity against-Objection to-Appeal-Maintainability for first time in.

In a partnership action instituted by the legal representatives of a deceased partner against the surviving partners, it appeared that the partnership's firm had in 1903 entered into a contract with the Secretary of State for India to construct a bridge which was completed in due course, but a dispute arose between the firm and the Secretary of State as to the amount payable to the firm under the contract, The surviving partners, or one of them, agreed with the Secretary of State that that dispute should be referred to the arbitrament of a named person. The legal personal representatives of the deceased partner were not parties to the reference. The arbitration resulted in the award of a certain sum as payable to the firm, and that sum was paid and brought into the partnership accounts. On the appeal to the Court below the legal personal representatives of the deceased partner put forward for the first time a contention that they were not bound by the agreement of reference or the award; and the High Court upheld that contention.

Held that the High Court ought to have rejected the contention as having been put forward at too late a stage in the proceedings.

- Agreement as to land rendered by statute of no "force or avail in law" - Applicability of doctrine to case of.

Clause 2 of Ceylon Ordinance No. 7 of 1840 provides:

"No sale purchase transfer or mortgage of land or other immor able property and no promise bargain or contract or agreement for effecting any such object or for establishing any security, interest or incumbrance affecting land or other immovable property (other than a lease at will or for any period not exceeding one month) nor any contract or agreement for the future sale or purchase of any land or other immovable property shall be of force or avail in law unless the same shall be in writing and signed by the party making the same ... in the presence of a licensed notary public and two or more witnesses present at the same time and unless the execution of such writing deed or instrument be duly attested by such notary and witnesses."

Held, affirming the Court below, that no suit could be maintained in Ceylon upon an agreement affecting land which had not been executed and attested in manner required by clause 1 of the Ordinance, and that in the case of such an agreement the operation of the Ordinance could not be avoided under the equitable doctrine of part performance.

The doctrine of part performance has reference to S. 4 of the English Statute of Frauds, and has no application to the stringent provisions of clause 2 of the Ordinance by which an agreement as to land not duly attested by a notary and two witnesses is rendered of no "force or avail in law." -English law doctrine as to.

It is no doubt true that there is a locus ponitonliac, that is, "a power of resiling from an incomplete engagement. from an unaccepted offer, from a mutual contract to which all have not assented, from an obligatin to which writing is requisite, and has not yet been adhibited in an authentic This is the situation where the parties stand upon nothing but an engagement which is not final or complete, But where the actings and conduct of parties are founded on, then in all such cases "rei-interventus raises a personal exception, which excludes the plea of locus penitentiac. It is inferred from any proceedings, not unimportant, on the part of the obligee, known to and permitted by the obligor to take place on the faith of the contract as if it were perfect; provided they are unequivocally referable to the agreement, and productive of alternation of circumstances, loss. or inconvenience, though not irretrievable" (8). Equity will not fail to support a transaction clothed imperfectly in those legal forms to which finality attaches after the bargain has been acted upon. If confessed or in part carried into execution, it will be binding on the parties, and carried into further execution as such, in equity. The law of India is not inconsistent with these principles. On the contrary it follows them (9). (Lerd Shaw.) MAHOMED MUSA v. AGHORE KUMAR GANGULI.

Mortgage-Redemption-Extinguishment of right of, and transfer of portion of property absolutely to mortgagee-Compromise as to-Decree on foot of-Actings of parties pursuant to-No registered conveyance by mortgager to mortgagee-Applicability of doctrine to case of.

A suit of the year 1873 between mortgagor and mortgagees was compromised on the terms (1) that the debts due under the mortgages were to be for ever extinguished, and (2) that the mortgaged property itself was to be divided among the parties in specific shares, and that the mortgagor should transfer certain shares, of the property to the mortgagees, and reserve one to himself free from incumbrances. It was also agreed that the mortgagees should get their names registered as proprietors of the proportions of the property to which they were entitled under the arrangement.

The razinama concluded by stating that the suit should be decided by declaring that the mortgagees should get the amount claimed to their satisfaction in the manner stated in the razinama. The razinama was accordingly produced to the court, and it ordered "that the suit be decided in persuance of the terms of the razinama, and that the suit be struck off from the list of pending cases".

The compromise agreement was not registered and to transfers or conveyances were ever executed. The compromise was, however, acted upon by all the parties to it, and by their successors in title from the date of the compromise for a period of between thirty and forty years. The motigagor dealt with the property reserved by him reciting the arrangement made by the compromise. There were also transfers of the interests of the mortgagees. In 1878 the respective mortgagees caused their names to be registered as proprietors of their shares and there was also registration of mutation of names in respect of subsequent transfers by them. The rights of the parties were dealt with precisely upon the same footing as if the mortgager had made as express conveyance parting with the equity of redemption, and transferring allotted shares of the property itself to the mortgagees, and reserving a share to himself.

In a suit brought in 1908 by the heirs and representative of the mortgagor for redemption of the said mortgage, hild that the plaintiffs had no subsisting right to redeem (6).

Even although the razinama and the decree taken to gether were considered to be defective or inchoate as dements making up a final and validly concluded agreement for the extinction of the equity of redemption, the acting of parties have been such as to supply all such defects (7-8), (Lord Shaw.) villages. That deed was presented for registration by one of the uncles and daly registered. In the year following, there was loss in respect of one of the villages. On a demand by the appellant, the uncles wrote a letter to him that he was liable for the profit or loss accrued or accruing, that they were not to take shares and pay the loss, and that he might manage as he liked. That leater was not registered. Subsequently the ancies transferred their shares in the village in question to the predecessor in interest of the 1st respondent.

In a suit brought by the 1st respondent against the appellant and others for partition and possession of the share in the village in question conveyed to his prede essor in interest. held, reversing the court below, that the arrangements evidenced by the dee's of settlement and the letter were sufficient for the purpose of conveying the shares of the uncles to the appellant, that the uncles had no right to convey the shares they purported to convey to the predecessor in interest of the 1st respondent, and that his suit must therefore have been dismissed with costs.

The real argument that has been brought before this Board against the effect mentioned above being gives to the transactions evidenced by the said deed of settlement and the letter is that the first document was not formally signed by the uncles, and that the second document was not registered and therefore could not be given in evidence. Their Lordships think that both these contentions fail. With regard to the first, the arrangement was a perfectly good one according to the law in India accepted by the uncles and acted upon by the appellant, even although the document was not in fact signed by the persons to whom it was addressed. That the appellant did act upon it is be-yond dispute. The only question that follows is whether the subsequent letter was an effective instrument necessary for the purpose of transferring the property, or whether it was only a piece of evidence not constituting acceptance of the earlier proposal but showing that it had been accepted and that the uncles admitted that the condition upon which the first agreement was to operate had in fact arisen. Their Lordships think that the latter is the true interpretation. The document itself contains no statement of conveyance or release. It repeats that the uncles are not to take a share and pay the losses because they are unable to do so, and read, as it must be read, as a sequel to the earlier document, it is a recognition that the share will pass as that document provides. There was consequently no need for its registration. (Lord Buckmaster.) PANDURANG KRISH-NAJI v. MARKANDEYA TUKARAM.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff after the death of P for a declaration that she was entitled to the village of Repudi; held, that, even if the proof of the acceptance made to P, that is to say, of an acceptance in terms, was defective, yet, having segard to the demand by the plaintiff and her husband for a definite proposal as a condition of their staying on with P, that the actings of the plaintiff and her husband took place upon the footing of the proposal so made, and that they were known by P to have taken and to be taking place upon that footing, the objection that the contract itself was inchoate or incomplete could not be maintained (148.)

Anticipation.

Objection to patent on ground of-Test of. The test of anticipation has been dealt with in many cases. The specification which is relied upon as an anticipation of the invention must give you the same knowledge as the specification of the invention itself. When the question is solely a question of prior publication, it is not enough to prove that the apparatus described in an earlier specification could be made to produce this or that result. It must also be shown that the specification contain clear and unmistakeable directions so to use it. The test is, would a man who was grappling with the problem solved by the patent attacked, and having no knowledge of that patent, if he had had the alleged anticipation in his hand, have said, That gives me what I wish?"

To find out whether or not there has been anticipation, it is not legitimate to interpret the earlier patent in the light of the knowledge given by the later one.

Again, as observed by Lord Moulton "in order to render a document a prior publication of an invention it must be shown that it publishes to the world the whole invention, i. e., all that is material to instruct the public how to put the invention in practice. It is not enough that there should be suggestions which, taken with suggestions upon the expiry of the life interest therein, which P had derived from other and independent documents, may be PATENT-(Contd.)

shown to fore-hadow the invention or important steps in it, Since the date of the vigorous protest of Lord Justice James against such a mosaic of prior publications, this has been a universally accepted and most salutory principle. It applies with exceptional force in cases where the alleged prior publications are the specifications of unsuccessful inventions which have accordingly never passed into public general knowledge, but have rightly been forgotten. ## Discovery same by independant investigators.

-First applicant -- Patent granted to-Validity of. There are many instances in various branches of science of independent investigators making the same discovery. That does not prevent the one who first applies and gets a patent from having a good patent, for a patent represents a quad pro quo. The quid to the patentee is the monopoly; the quo is that he presents to the public the knowledge which they have not got. That knowledge the other inventor has kept sealed in his own breast, and he therefore cannot complain that his rival got the patent. And if this is the case when a person can show that he actually made the discovery, surely that is a much stronger case than the one in which the objector does not say that he did discover but only that if he had experimented he would have discovered. Infringement of - Damages for.

In an action of damages for the alleged infringement of certain exclusive rights secured to the plaintiff by three patents, the District Judge, who found that the alleged infringement had been established, assessed damages at Rs. 10,000. That sum was fixed, on the footing that it was a fair consideration for the defendant to pay for a license to use the plaintiff's inventions.

Held that the principle of assessment was erroneous, and that the damages due (if any) must be limited to the loss occasioned to the patentee by reason of the defendant's infringement (141). (Lord Watson.) LEDGARD v. BULL.

Court of original jurisdiction was the Court of the District Judge. On 15—2—1882, the defendant personally signed, along with the plaintiff and his pleader, a petition praying the District Judge to withdraw the case from the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and to try the suit in his own Court. On the same day an order was made in the District Court in these terms:—"That the case be transferred from the Subordinate Judge's Court to the file of the Court, and the date will be fixed hereafter."

The District Judge had no power to make that order except under S. 25 of C. P. C. of 1877, and, as by reason of S. 22 of the Patent Act the Sub-Judge had no jurisdiction to try the action, the District Judge had no power to make an order of transfer of the case. In his written statement filed before the District Judge, the defendant pleaded that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, in respect it had not been regularly brought into Court.

Held, differing from the Courts below, that, apart from any question of estoppel affecting the defendant, there was no competent suit depending at the plaintiff's instance on the 6th of April, 1882, when the defendant raised the plea of no jurisdiction in his written statement of defence (144).

It is quite true that, dealing with the respective functions of judge and jury, there is high authority to the effect that while it is for the judge to construe a specification, it is for the jury to contrast the specification so construed with the jury to contrast the specification so construed with the facts of the case as found so as to arrive at a conclusion either as to anticipation or as to novelty and subject matter, but there must be no misdirection as to the facts found or as to how they may be handled. In a case tried by a Judgalome he fulfils the functions of both judge and jury. Provisions of-Compliance with-What amounts

The appeal arose out of an action of damages for the alleged infringement of certain exclusive rights secured to the plaintiff by three Indian patents. The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the plaintiff had failed to comple with the provisions of S. 34 of the Indian Patent Act, XV of 1859, inasmuch as no particulars of the breaches complained of had been delivered with the plaint; and that, in the absence of such particulars, he could not be called upon to state a defence to the action upon its merits.

The High Court held, differing from the District Judge, that there had been an entire failure on the part of the plaintiff to observe the requirements of S. 34 of the Patent Act, and consequently " that the plaintiff came into court without any case which could possibly be tried."

All three of the plaintiffs' patents related to one article, a kiln for burning bricks, and the second and third in date were improvements upon the invention specified in the first, The plaintiff pointed to a particular kiln constructed anused by the defendant, and in his plaint he not only referred to his patents, but indicated in the case of each of them the distinctive features of his invention which he alleged to have been appropriated by the defendant in the construction and use of the kiln.

PATENT ACT XV OF 1859-(Contd.)

Held, reversing the High Court and restoring the District Judge, that there had been a sufficient compliance with the provisions of S. 34 of the Patent Act (142-3).

The learned Judges of the High Court have misconstrued the enactments of S. 34, which refer to the particulars of breaches to be delivered by a plaintiff complaining of infringement. The sole object of these enactments is to give the defendant fair notice of the case which he has to meet; and it is quite immaterial whether the requisite information be given in the plaint itself, or in a separate prper (142). In an action for damages for alleged infringement of certain patents, the High Court, differing from the Court below, upheld the defendant's plea that there had been an entire failure on the part of the plaintiff to observe the requirements of S. 34 of the Patent Act, and that the plaintiff came into Court without any case which could possibly be tried. They, however, allowed the plaintiff to amend his plaint, to present it in the proper Court, and to deliver with the plaint the particulars required by S. 34 of the Patent

Held, that the decree of the High Court was unsustainable (141).

It sets aside, or at least ignores, the whole previous proceedings including the plaint in which the suit originated; and it directs a new and amended plaint to be presented to the Court, which is simply equivalent to directing a new suit to be instituted. The High Court ought simply to have given the plaintiff the alternative of having his suit dismissed, or of withdrawing it, with liberty to bring a new action (141-2). (Lard Watson). LEDGARD P. ## PATENTS AND DESIGNS ACT II OF 1911.

-S. 29-Patent-Validity -Newelty-Want of, and prior user-Effect-Improvements alleged subject of distinct and separate claims in letters patent-Adjudication of each claim independently-Necessity-Invalidity of either claim-Effect,

The question for decision was whether the respondents' Indian Patent No. 2191 was a valid patent.

The said letters patent were granted to the respondents in respect of "improvements in the manufacture of a medicinal preparation," and, as stated in the specification, the present invention relates to improvements in the treatment of a substance found in the interior of some Bamboos and known as 'tabakshir' or 'Bamboo manna,' for the purpose of refining the same when in the raw state to convert it into a nutritious and saleable article.

This medicinal preparation was commonly known and marketed as "Bauslochan" and admittedly had for many years prior to the date of the said patent been refined and sold throughout India.

Admittedly prior to the date of the said patent "Bauslochan" had been prepared for the market by a process which included (a) washing the crude material in water; (6) treating it at some period of the process with sulphuric acid; and (r) calcining the mass which had been so treated in an iron stove or pan at a high temperature.

The improvements alleged to have been discovered by the respondents, and in respect of which the said letters patent were granted, consisted broadly (1) in the addition of sulphuric acid to the substance at a defined stage of the process, viz., when red hot, and (2) in the use of the process of heating of a stove constructed as described and illustrated in the said letters patent.

The alleged improvements were the subject of distinct and separate claims in the said letters patent.

Held that the first claim in the specification, viz., "In the preparation of the sail substance the treatment of the same when red hot with an acid" was invalid, on the grounds of want of novelty and prior user, that therefore the letters patent were invalid, and that the appellate court erred in not keeping sufficiently clearly before their minds the necessity of adjudicating on each claim independently and in constraing the specification as if it was one for a combination and not for subject-matters which were distinctively claimed.

Quaere whether, when, as found by the appellate Court, "that in some form or another, and at some stage or another in the process of manufacture, acid has always been used for purifying the material," a valid claim for patent could be made for the use of such acid for the same purpose at a definite stage, e.g., when the material was red hot,

Semble, the substitution of well-known earthernware vessels in lieu of iron ones for the purpose of carrying out the process of manufacture would not necessarily be a good subject matter for a patent. (Lord Carson.) GOPI LAL v. LAKHPAT RAL (1923) 18 L. W. 141-

The pottah is issued by the Collector. S. 149, I. P. C. creates a specific offence and deals with the punishment of that offence alone. It postulates an assembly of five or more persons having a common object. ter., one of those named in S. 141, and then the doing of acts by members of it in prosecution of that object. There is a difference between object and intention, for, though their object is common, the intentions of the several members may differ and indeed may be similar only in respect that they are all unlawful, while the element of participation in action, which is the leading feature of S. 34, is replaced in S. 149 by membership of the assembly at the time of the committing of the offence. Both sections deal with combinations of persons, who become punishable as sharers in an

Thus they have a certain resemblance and may to some exent overlap, but S. 149 cannot, at any rate, relegate S. 34 to the position of dealing only with joint action by the commission of identically similar criminal acts, a kind of case which is not in itself deserving of separate treatment at all (52). S. 114—Applicability and effect — Abettor present when crime is committed—Liability of — Crime for which he is punishable.

S. 114, J. P. C. is a provision which is only brought into operation when circum-tances amounting to abetment of a particular crime has first been proved, and then the presence of the accused at the commission of that crime is proved in addition. Abetment does not in itself involve the actual commission of the crime abetted. It is a crime apart. S. 114 deals with the case, where there has been the crime of absiment, but where also there has been actual commission of the crime abetted and the abettor has been present thereat, and the way in which it deals with such a case is this. Instead of the crime being still abetment with circumstances of aggravation, the crime becomes the very crime abested. The section is evidentiary, not punitary. l'ecause participation de facto may sometimes be obscure in detail, it is established by the presumption juris of de jure that actual pre-ence Nus prior abetment can mean nothing el-e but participation. A Sub-Postmaster was counting money at his office table in the back room, when several men appeared at the dear which led into the room from a courtyard, and, when just inside the door, called on him to give up the money. Almost immediately afterwards they fired pistols at him. He was hit in two places, and died almost at once. Without taking any money the assailants fled separating as they ran. The appellant, though he fired his pistol several times, was pursued and eventually was secured just after he had thrown it away. The others e-caped. There was evidence for the prosecution, such as the jury was entitled to act upon, that three men fired at the Postmaster, of whom the appellant was one. An ejected shell was found just inside the room near the door, and it fitted appellant's pistol. The bullet which killed the postmaster also fitted the ejected shell and the pistol carried by the prisoner. It was not, however, conclusively proved that no other assailant had a similar pistol to that which the appellant had or used a similar bullet to that found in the deceased.

The trial Judge directed the jury upon the footing that the prisoner was one of the men inside the room, that he was one of those who fired, and might be the man who fired the fatal shot, and that, in any event, if they were satisfied in terms of S. 34 of the Penal Code, that the Postmaster was killed in furtherance of the common intent of all, then the appellant was guilty of murder, whether he fired the fatal shot or no.

Held, that the trial Judge, and the Full Bench which affirmed him, took a right view of S. 34, of the Penal Code. I.L.R. 41 C. 1072 over-ruled. (Lond Summer.) BRIENDRA KUMAR GHOSH V KING EMPEROR. (1924) 52 I.A. 40 = 58 O. 197 = 89 C. W. N. 181 = (1925) M. W. N. 26 = PENAL CODE-(Contd.)

The petitioner had obtained, with a fraudulent intent, letters of administration to be granted, which recited that a certain lost Government promissory note was the property of one A, and further he had with fraudulent intent sent those letters of administration to the Public Debt Office as the foundation for an application for payment of the money. On the petitioner being charged with offences under Ss. 511 and 420 of the Penal Code, the learned Judge who tried the case laid down in his charge to the jury that in order to convict the petitioner they must be satisfied, not only that he intended to cheat, but that he had done an act towards that cheating. The Jury found the petitioner guilty, whereupon he was convicted under the said sections.

Held, that the learned Judge clearly had in view the distinction between preparation to commit an offence and acts done towards the commission of the offence, that there was no misdirection on the part of the learned Judge, and that there had been no miscarriage of justice. S. 3—Money payable by Government in respect of a right, privilege, perquisite, or office formerly enjoyed—Deshmukh—Allowance payable to—Nature of.

The plaintiff alleged that he was the hereditary debmukh of certain turufs or districts; that as such he and his ancestors had long been entitled to receive directly from the ryots a percentage equivalent to six pies in the rupee upon that part of the revenue which was assessed in cash; a smaller percentage upon that which was assessed in grain; and certain other dues.

Those rights of the deshmukhs were, as the plaintiff said, confirmed, or as the other side put it, regranted by the Sunnud of 1777. And the plaintiff alleged that up to the year 1842 he received his dues directly from the ryots, but that since 1842 the Government had received them on his behalf and become accountable to him for them. It was an undisputed fact that in the year 1868 there was a new revenue settlement, since which the whole of the revenue receivable by Government and assessed upon the ryots had been a money assessment, no part of the revenue being been a money assessment, no part of the revenue being afterwards assessed in grain. The question was whether the claim of the plaintiff, however it might have stood on the sunnud of 1777, had not been brought within the Persions Act of 1871 by the alterations in its character that subsequently took place.

A prior suit proceeded upon the alteration made under the revenue settlement of 1868. The plaintiff appeared to have claimed six pies in the rupee upon the total amount of the assessment, which then consisted wholly of morey. The Government met that claim by a contention that upon so much of the existing assessment as might be considered to represent the former grain assessment he was eatiled only to the smaller percentage. The judge decided that question in the plaintiff's favour, and allowed him the large question in the plaintiff's favour, and allowed him the large upon the whole of the assessment; and did upon the ground, inter alia, that by the change in the system of assessment his interest might have been affected.

and therefore that it was equitable to allow him the larger percentage upon the whole of the then assessment. The plaintiff's claim in the suit out of which the appeal arose adopted that definition of his rights, and sought to enforce them accordingly.

Held that what was payable by the Government after the settlement of 1868 was so payable out of the general land revenue in respect of a right, privilege, perquisite, or office formerly enjoyed within the meaning of S. 3 of the Pensions Act of 1871, that the suit was therefore within that Act, and that the plaintiff must seek his remedy by the procedure thereby provided (126). -Grant of money or land revenue conferred by former Government-Deshmukh-Allowance payable by Peshing to -Nature of.

The plaintiff alleged that he was the hereditary deshmukh of certain turufs or districts; that as such he and his ancestors had long been entitled to receive directly from the ryots a percentage equivalent to six pies in the rupee upon that part of the revenue which was assessed in cush; a smaller percentage upon that which was assessed in grain; and certain other dues

Those rights of the deshmukhs were, as the plaintiff said, confirmed, or, as the other side put it, regranted by the sunnud of 1777. And the plaintiff alleged that up to the year 1842 he received his dues directly from the ryots, but that since 1842 the Government had received them on his behalf, and become accountable to him for them. It was an undisputed fact that in the year 1868 there was a new revenue settlement, since which the whole of the revenue receivable by Government and assessed upon the ryots had been a money assessment, no part of the revenue being afterwards assessed in grain. The question was whether in its inception and original character the deshmukh's right was not one within the scope and operation of the Pensions

The sunnud of 1777 recited the representation or petition of the plaintiff's ancestors, from which it appeared that whatever might have been the nature of the original right, the right of receiving those haks from the ryots had, at all events for a considerable number of years, been suspended: that as early as the time of Sivaji the haks were resumed by the Government of the day, and the value of them credited to the Government-that is, treated as part of the general revenue of the country-certain fixed salaries being paid to the deshmukhs; and that that system, with some variation as to the amount of the salary. continued during the time of Kanoji Angria, and was in force when the country again came under the Maharata rule. The petition of the then Deshmukhs to the Peshwa prayed to have the old and suppressed allowances restored to them; stating however, that there was a dispute between them and certain other parties as to who were the proper watandars. The result was that the Peishwa recognised the rights of the plaintiff's ancestors as between them and the rival claimants. and made an order upon the mahajans and the khots of the villages of the mehals or turufs in question, enjoining then bandi, whatever it might amount to, according to the established practice, to be paid by the rayyats to the petitioners, their sons and grandsons.

Held, affirming the High Court, that the restoration of the old allowances by the Peishwa was in substance a grant by him of part of his land revenue, and therefore fell within the terms of S. 4 of the Pensions Act without the aid of S. 3 thereof as a grant of money or land-revenue, conferred by a former Government (125).

Whatever the foundation of the deshmukh's rights originally was, the sunnud must now be treated as the foundation of those rights as they exist (125). (See James W. Colvile.) VASUDEV SADASHIV MODAK v. COLLECTOR OF RATNAGIRL (1877) 4 I. A. 119=2 B. 99 (108 9)= 3 Sar. 701 = 3 Suth. 391.

-Malikana-Suit to recover-Certificate under Act-

Mouzah P was taken into the hands of the Government and held A' has in or before the year 1880, and by a deed dated in September of that year the plaintiff and defendant formally made over to Government their proprietary rights on consideration of receiving Rs. 2,000 per annum as malikana in perpetuity. It did not appear under what circumstances the mouzah was taken into khas management, but it could not be doubted that the allowance stipulated for and granted was of the nature indicated by the term malikana, i.e., a grant of a portion of the revenue in lieu of pre existing proprietary rights.

Held that a suit for the recovery of the said allowance was not cognizable by the Civil Courts without the certificate required by the Pensions Act of 1871 (161-2).

It is at first somewhat surprising that a property which has been the subject of bargain and formal grant should be excluded from the cognizance of Civil Courts. But it cannot be denied that it falls within the literal construction of the words of the Pensions Act, i.e., it is something payable on the part of Government in respect of a right (161), (Lord Hobboure.) DEO KUAR v. MAN KUAR.

-Toda-girashuk-Payment made by Government in lieu of - Suit for - Civil Court - Jurisdiction.

The ancestors of one M formerly levied a toda gira chuk upon certain villages in the Surat district. In 1862 the Government of Bombay passed a resolution, which described the position of the Garasias at that time, and which gave them the option of resuming the collection of the former hukks from the villages, or of receiving from the Government allowances of an equivalent amount, the Government in that case discontinuing the further receipt of the hukks. An arrangement of the kind described in that resolution was evidently made with M's family, though before the year 1862. Payments of money in lieu of the hukk were made before that year, the payments being divided into three parts to three different branches of M's family and M himself being paid one-third. The payments were continued by the Government down to the death of M in 1865, and thereafter they discontinued the payment to the plaintiff, M's adopted son, though the Government continued to pay the two other shares. Since 1862 the Government had ahandoned the collection of the hukk from the villages.

In a sait brought by the plaintiff against the Government of Bombay to recover the arrears of the payments from the time of his father's death, held that the suit related to a grant of money conferred by the British Government; that it fell directly and plainly within the language of S. 4 of the Pensions Act of 1871; and that the Civil Court to cause the amount of the haq on the Government jama- were prohibited from taking cognizance of the suit (86-7).

There is in this case of grant of manny by the Government, and a right for which it was substituted. It, therefore, tells within the language of S. 4. The right of the Government was on a peculiar and prevailans kind; and allow more in report of rights of this manne are clearly contemplated by the Art, and insended to be included in it. Even in the arrangement made by the Government was not strictly a grant, the said relates to money possible by the Government in respect of a right (So). (So: Mattager E. Smith.) Mattag WM. - Ss. 4 and 3-Great of money or land-reconne-Meaning of Figs lens general principle. Applicability.

By S. 3 of the Pensions Act the expression grant of money or hardoevenue in S. 4 thereof is made to include "anythire parable on the part of the Government in respect of any right, privilege, penjaisite, or office," It was argued that the construction should be limited to rights crassion general with pensions. But there is no sofficient ground for so limiting the language; and it is to be observed that the words of the Pensions Act of 1871, which include this case, are not found in the former regulations relating to pensions. There is no meason, therefore, either in the language of the Act itself or in the anteredent legislation, for constraining these words as amplicable only to right—of the nature of pensions (86.7), (Six Montague E. Smith.) MAHARAVAL MOHANSINGH INVSINGH; GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY. (1881) 8 I. A. 77—5 B. 408 (421-2) = 4 Sax. 230.

Plaintiff brought the suit out of which the appeal arese against the Sceretary of State for a declaration that the resumption by the Government of a music grant admittedly subject to the provisions of the Pensions Act was invalid as against him. He was met with the objection that having regard to the provisions of Ss. 5 and 6 of the Pensions Act such a suit was not maintainable.

The Sub-Judge over-ruled the objection, and made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The High Court, on the appeal of the defendant, reversed his order and dismissed the suit, holding that the Civil Court was incompetent to make a declaration directly or indirectly affecting the liability of the Government "to pay the revenue to the plaintiff."

Held that the High Court were clearly right in setting aside the decree of the Sub-Judge in so far as it affected the liability of Government in respect of the revenue of the much grant (314). (23 of 1871). It appeared that after the judgment which disposed of the principal questions in the suit had been delivered final judgment was suspended upon an objection that no certificate had been obtained. Before the case was finally disposed of and the final decree passed, the certificate was obtained and delivered to the Court, and the Court the eupon held that the suit might proceed.

Held that the Court below came to a correct decision in

It is contended that the suit ought to have been dismissed altogether as regards the property held under the grant, because no certificate was obtained from the commen ement of the suit; but their Lordships think that the Court, although up to a certain time they had proceeded apparently without objection with the suit without a certificare, was justified in going on with the suit when it was received. The Statute says (S. 6) that : "A Civil Court otherwise competent to try it"-this Court was competent to try it - "shall take cognizance of any such claim upon receiving a certificate from such collector." When the Court received the certificate it was bound to take cognizance of the claim; and it seems to their Lor/ships that finding an existing suit when it received the certificate it might take cognizance of the claim in that suit (19-20). A competent Civil Court is authorized under S. 6 of the Pensions Act of 1871 to take cognizance of a claim in respect of "pensions and grants by Government of money or land-revenue" only on receiving a certificate from the authority mentioned in the section "that the case may be so tried." The object of this provision evidently is that in cases of conflicting titles, the Revenue authorities should grant to the unsuccessful applicant an opportunity for adjudication of his right by the regular Courts of Justice. ## PERMANENT RIGHT OF OCCUPANCY-(Contd.) PERMANENT RIGHT OF OCCUPANCY-(Contd.) Acquisition of-Modes of-Heritability and transferability of.

A permanent right of occupancy in land in India is a right, subject to certain conditions, of a tenant to hold the land permanently which he occupies. It is a heritable right, and in some places it possibly may be transferable by the tenant to a stranger. That permanent right of occupancy can only be obtained by a tenant by custom, or by a grant from an owner of the land who happens to have power to grant such a right, or under an Act of the Legislature. ## Ryotwari Pattadar-Under-ryot of-Claim by.

-Presumption-Onus of Proof.

In a suit by a Government pattadar of certain garden and dry cultivated lands in a ryotwari tract in Madras to eject the defendants, the persons in possession of the suit lands, as being yearly tenants who had received due notice to quit, plaintiff's title was conceded, and the notice by which he purported to terminate the defendant's tenancy was not disputed; it was also admitted that the defendants held under, if not from, the plaintiff; and to resist the plaintiff's claim the defendants set up a permanent tenancy or on occupancy right in themselves. Held that the burden lay on the defendants of proving the existence of their permanent tenancy or occupancy right (84-5).

If this (permanent tenancy or occupancy right) was not established then the defendants must fail, and, to adopt the language of S. 101 of the Evidence Act. as the defendants were bound to prove the existence of their permanent tenancy or occupancy right, the burden of proof as to it lay on them (85.)

In such a case the plaintiff has only to establish his title and need not also negative the defendants' claim to permanency (85.)

Permanence is not a universal and integral incident of an under-ryot's holding; if claimed, it must be established. This may be done by proving a custom, a contract, or a title and possibly by other means (86.) (Sir Lawrence Joukins). SETURATNAM AIYAR v. VENKATACHALA (1919) 47 I. A. 76=43 M. 567 (576-7)=

Plaintiff, a Government pattadar of certain garden and dry cultivated lands in a syotwari tract in Madras sued to eject the defendants, the persons in possession of the lands, on the ground that they were only yearly tenants and that their tenancy had been terminated by a doe notice to quit. The defendants resisted the suit claiming to have a permanent tenancy or right of occupancy in the suit lands.

The evidence showed that the defendants had been in possession for a very long period at uniform rents, that they had reclaimed the lands and made wells in the garden lands, alienating from time to time wells and lands attached to them, and that they had cultivated the lands with crops of their own choice.

Held, that the defendants had discharged the ones of proving that they had permanent occupancy rights. (Sir Laterence Jenkins.) SETURATNAM AIVAR P. VENKATA-CHALA GOUNDAN. (1919) 47 I. -Proof of-Onus-Quantum-Dispute as to one-half of an estate-Purchase of Kultivaram rights by underryots in lands in other half-Evidentiary value of.

Permanence is not a universal and integral incident of an under-ryot's holding. If claimed, it must be established, This may be done by proving custom, contract or a ti-le and possibly by other means.

The first respondent was the owner of a one-half share of an estate called the Chinna Pannai estate, and was ryotwari pattadar of one-half undivided share of that estate. He brought the suit out of which the appeal arose to establish his right to have all the lands within his title partitioned on the footing that the appellants as a community of cultivators had not acquired the permanent rights of occupancy which they claimed. The appellants admitted that the respondents' predecessors-in-title had been regularly receiving trian samiblingum for his share of the They raised no objection to a division being effected in respect of the dry and rain-fed lands within the respondents' title. But they maintained that the wellirrigated lands and palmyras should be excluded from the partition on the ground that in respect to all of them they were permanent tenants who had acquired by long occupation the Kudiwaram of those tands, subject only to the payment of a fixed annual return at certain specified rates. The appellants succeeded in showing little else than that they had remained in undisturbed possession of some of the land in question for a long period at a more or less uniform rent. They did not attempt to prove any custom upon which they found, and their attempt to prove a contract completely failed. The alienations on which they found all turned out to be of comparatively recent date, and not of such a kind as would ordinarily be brought to the notice of the pattadar. as they did not in most cases involve any change of tenancy.

Held that the onus lay on the appellants of proving the existence of their permanent tenancy or occupancy right. and that the facts established in the case were insufficient to discharge that onus.

Held also that the fact that in the half of the Chinna Annai which was not claimed by the respondents some of the appellants actually acquired the Kudituram of the land, while not conclusive, militated against their claim. (Lord | DARI-PERMANENT SETTLEMENT OF,

-Sale of goods pledged - Notice to pledger of -Necessity-Sale of goods pledged on arrival unless then redeemed or agent of pledger sent to join in the tale-Provision in contract for -Default of Nedgor to do either-Notice not necessary in case of.

Where there is the mere circumstance of a pledge and nothing more, the person who holds the piedge must give notice before he sells. There is here, however, more than that mere circumstance, for, when the terms of the agreement in this case are looked to, it is quite plain that when the cotton had all arrived it was (unless then redeemed) to , be sold, and it was the duty of those whose cotton it was to have their agent in the way to redoem or attend to the sale, and, if they made default in having their agent in the way, or paying, which they did, then the persons who held the cotton had a right to sell.

The case is this: cotton is pledged to be sold on arrival, unless then redeemed. The parties who pledged it contract either to redeem or to have an agent there to join in the sale on arrival. In such a case, if their agent was not there, and they never had one there, it simply is as if you struck out everything about the sale being through the agent, and as if it was neither more nor less than a pledge with these parties to sell on arrival. That being so it being pledged to be sold on arrival, there was no necessity for any notice. (See Lawrence Peel.) POKUR-MULL KISHEN DYAL P. GOKOOLDASS GOPALDASS

Where a pledgee, having power to sell for default, takes over, as if upon a sale to himself, the property pledged, without the authority of the pledgor, but crediting it in account with him, the act, though an unauthorised conversion, does not put an end to the contract of the pledge, so as to entitle the pledgor to have the property back without payment of the amount thereby secured (67).

The pledgor is however bound by re-sales duly effected by the piedgee to third persons after such abortive sales to himself. But where the piedgee has erroneously represented to the pledgor before such sales that his securities have been sold they can no longer be regarded as pledged, and he becomes on such re-sales liable in damages for the value thereof including the interest thereon (68).

Immediately after the entrustment to him. L pledged the goods with the Bank which were accordingly placed in the Bank's custody. Sometime after, L sold the hales predged with the Bank and they were accordingly delivered by the Rank to L or his order, without notice of any claim by any other person. It was found that no claim was made by A to the goods against the Bank before the goods passed out of its hands. In a suit by A brought against the Bank and L and claiming delivery of the bales entrusted, or, in the alternative, payment of the value of the said bales, and, in the event of its being held that he was not entitled to any such reiief, then asking that his rights should be ascertained and declared, that is, that the securities deposited by L with the Bank should be marshalled in his favour, held that the fact that the Bank parted with the cotton to or to the order of L without notice of any claim by any other person afforded a complete defence to the suit. The appellant obtained a decree from the High Coart establishing his title as against the respondents to a revenue-paying estate, and subsequently obtained possession of the estate in execution of the decree. That decree was subsequently reversed by the judgment of the Privy Council and the respondents were in pursuance thereof replaced in possession of the estate in dispute. In the interval, while the appellant was in possession, the appeilant was called upon to pay, and did in fact pay, large sums for Government revenue and other charges, assessed upon the estate and recoverable in the same manner as Government revenue. On a question arising as to whether the appellant was entitled to recover from the respondents the amount so paid by him, the Judges of the High Court held that the appellant, though in possession under the decree of the court was in " wrongful 'possession."

Held, that it was a some what strong thing to hold that the appellant when he paid the Government revenue was in

Jungle land.

ADVERSE POSSESSION OF.

-Land of considerable area-Possessien of portions of for portion of period by either party-Proof of-Effect.

The possession required to make out a claim of title to land by adverse possession must be adequate in continuity, and in extent to shew that it is possession adverse to the competitor.

Where, in a case in which plaintiff claimed title by adverse possession to jungle land of considerable area, the best evidence of possession by him did not cover the whole period, and applied only to small portions of the ground, while the defendant adduced tangible evidence of portions of the land far superior in quality to the evidence adduced by the plaintiff, held that the plaintiff failed to make out a title by adverse possession to the land in dispute.

The evidence of the defendant is not merely negative of the plaintiff's case so far as that portion of ground is concerned which has been so possessed by the defendant, but it is directly contradictory of the whole theory of the plaintiff's case of possession. Forest land, very little of which is capable of, or at least up to the date of dispute subject to, cultivation, is far removed as a subject of definite possession from lands under continuous and permanent cultivation, compactly situated and capable of being remembered with identification as the lands held and occupied in articulate plots or underleases. Possession of such property has to be interpreted according to the fairest view of what the property itself was capable of in the way of possession and what upon a broad view would be considered an adequate assertion of title by sufficient occupation (398). -Proof of.

In a suit brought on 9-4-1881 for the recovery of possession of two plots of land, the question was whether the plaintiff proved his possession of the suit land within twelve years of suit.

The condition of the land was such as to offer great difficulty in the proof of possession. In 1857 the whole was under water, together with a contiguous larger tract. The only use or enjoyment consisted in fishing. There was subsequently a gradual, slow, and still incomplete conversion of that lake into swamp, and of swamp into habitable land, and during that process parts of the land might not have been used at all for any purpose of enjoyment. It appeared that the plaintiff's title to, and possession of, the suit land were affirmed in proceedings of the revenue survey in 1857. It was proved clearly that fishery leases were granted from 1861 onwards by the plaintiff or his predecessors at substantial tents.

Held that the plaintiff's evidence of possession was of a character which, having regard to the nature of the land, was as substantial as could be expected (152-3). (Lord Hobboust.) RAJCOOMAR ROY v. GOBIND CHUNDER ROY.

- Proprietary possession-Easement right-Exident of-Distinction.

The suit was brought by the Zemindar of Singampatti for cancellation of a decision of the Government Survey Officer, and for a declaration of his title to certain tracts of mountain land, covered with forest and jungle, as being parts of his Zemindary.

The District Judge held it to be established by the evidence that, throughout what was called the third or western tract, the Zemindars of Singampatti had all along exercised the exclusive right of grazing cattle, cutting timber, and collecting mountain produce. With regard to what was called the first or eastern tract, he found that the Zemindars had exercised rights of precisely the same kind over the whole tract, but not to the exclusion of a certain amount of user by inhabitants of Government villages. Upon those findings the learned Judge came to the conclusion in law that the possession of the western tract by the respondent and his predecessors ought not to be ascribed to a title of property, but that it was sufficient to give him right to exclusive easements of pasturage, cutting timber, and collecting mountain produce over its whole area.

As to the eastern tract, he held that the respondent was entitled to easements over it of the same character, but not

On appeal, the High Court adopted the findings of the District Judge with respect to the Zemindar's exclusive possession of the western tract, but rejected his legal inference that the right thereby constituted was in the nature of easement, and held that it amounted to a full right of ownership.

Held that the High Court was right in the view which it took (156).

Having regard to the character of the subjects in controversy, the exclusive possession which the Zemindars are, by concurrent judgments, found to have enjoyed, appears to their Lordships to have in no particular fallen short of proprietary possession. There is no ground for presuming that a proprietor whose title was clear, and who was desirous of turning his estate to the best account, would have occupied or used the subjects in any other way than they did. When that circumstance is taken in connection with the fact that the Zemindars had a title which will apply include these subjects, and that these acts of possession have invariably been ascribed to that title, the inference drawn by the High Court appears to be inevitable (156).

The learned Judges of the High Court also expressed their concurrence in the findings of the District Judge with respect to the Zemindar's possession of the eastern tract, but came to the conclusion that their possession alone was that of proprietors, and that the proved acts of user by ryots from neighbouring villages were not of that character.

Held that the possession of the Zemindars as found by both the courts below with reference to that tract also would, in the absence of conflicting possession sufficient to cut down or qualify their right, entitle the respondent to a declaration of his proprietorship. Held further that there was nothing to show that aught done by the stranger ryots was in the assertion of right, and that the acts of user by them were, in any event, neither in amount nor quality sufficient to displace the proprietary title of the Zemindar (157). Quarre whether the evidence of acts of user by them would per se be sufficient to raise rights of easement, and if so in whose favour (157). (Lord Watson.) SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL D. Presumption against claim of.

The suit related to certain lands in Oudh which formerly belonged to M.K., the mother of the king who was deposed in the year 1856. She died on 12-2-1860, leaving three children-her eldest son the ex-king, the second son who was commonly called the General Sahib, and the respondent who was the defendant in the suit. The General Sahib died on 28 2-1858, leaving one son, the appellant, who was the plaintiff in the suit, and one daughter. The plaintiff commenced the suit on 11-3 1875, claiming four-fifteenths of the property, as being his share of the share which his father took as one of M. K's heirs. The defendant alleged that she was rightfully in possession under a deed of gift or exchange executed in her favour by M.K. sometime in the year 1856.

The defendant had for many years been in possession of the lands in question. No claim had been made by the ex-king or by the plaintiff's sister. The plaintiff himself did not allege ignorance or any other disadvantage which might

LAWFUL ORIGIN FOR-PRESUMPTION OF.

-Rule as to-Nature of- Conditions precedent to making of such presemption.

The presumption of an origin in some lawful title, which the courts have so often readily made in order to support possessory rights, long and quietly enjoyed, where no actual proof of title is forthcoming, is one which is not a mere branch of the law of evidence. It is resorted to because of the failure of actual evidence. Where the presumption of a lawful title depends upon the consent of the Kazi, the provisions of S. 114 of the Evidence Act do not prevent the inference of his consent in the absence of any evidence of an application to him for leave, or some other proved fact of that kind. The matter is one of a presumption, based on the policy of the law, but even considered as an interence from proved facts, the leave presumed is a thing, which may well be regarded as likely to have happened. At the same time it is not a presumption to be capriciously made, nor is it one which a certain class of possessor is entitled to de jure. In a case in which it is necessary to indicate what particular kind of lawful title is being presumed, the court must be satisfied that such a title was in its nature practicable and reasonably capable of being presumed, without doing violence to the probabilities of the case. The presumption is not an "open sesame", with which to unlock in favour of a particular kind of claimant a closed door, to which neither the law nor the proved facts would in themselves have afforded any key. It is the completion of a right, to which circumstances clearly point where time has obliterated any record of the original commencement. (Viscount Summer.) SYED MD. MAZAFFAR AL-MUSAVI v. PRESUMPTION OF CONVEYANCE TO DEFEAT, AND NOT TO SUPPORT.

-Propriety of making.

The presumption of a conveyance is resorted to, when such presumption is made to support a long possession. It will not be applied to defeat a long possession. If possession be not consistent with a title which is to be supported by a presumption of a former conveyance, that very possession would furnish ground for building another presumption on the first, viz., of a subsequent re-transfer or reconveyance. Presumitur retro-Applicability of maxim of.

The theory upon which the learned Judges have proceeded appears to have been this : that evidence of possession is not receivable as evidence of the identity of a piece of ground; that, in other words, evidence of possession is not material or good evidence in a question of parcel or no parcel. They certainly go to the length of indicating their opinion that evidence of sub-equent possession is not good evidence upon the question of parcel or no parcel at a previous date. To countenance that proposition would be to introduce an entirely new rule into the law. When the state of possession for a long period of years has been satisfactorily proved, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presumitur retra (110). (Lord Watson.) ANANGAMAN-JARI CHOWDHRANI 2. It is of the utmost consequence in India that the security which long possession affords should not be weakened. The appellant, the contesting defendant—was in possession of the property of one T, deceased, claiming title to the same under a sale deed executed by the widow of T. The plaintiffs, claiming to be the heirs of T, sucd for recovery of possession of the property from the appellant. One R was added as a supplemental defendant to the suit, and it appeared that a deed of compromise had been entered into between the plaintiffs and R, whereby they agreed to divide the sait property between them. The Sudd x Court found that the plaintiffs had not proved their title to recover but decreed possession to the plaintiff on the ground that, if the plaintiffs were not entitled, R would be so entitled, and as they had agreed to divide the spoils, it mattered not on which title the property was recovered.

Held that the decision of the Court below was in violation of the substantial principles of justice which regulated the joinder of parties and union of titles to see in one suit (529).

Presumption in favour of-Condition.

- Opposite party with title-Opposite party without it - Distinction.

In a suit brought by the respondents to recover possession of certain property from the appellant on the ground that they were the heirs of the last male owner of the property and were as such entitled to possession of the same on the death of his widow, the appellant pleaded, inter alia, that his possession should not be disturbed, by reason that the respondents were not the right heirs.

The widow of the last male owner died on 26—10—1818. The appellant, who was her Mokhtar and who resided with her, on her death took possession of the suit property. The property was attached by Decree of the Judge of the City of Patna, on 26—12—1818, with permission to any of the rival claimants to institute soits in 3 months. In the month of September, 1821, that Decree was reversed by the Provincial Court and the appellant restored to the possession of the property. Several suits were then instituted, and on 14—6—1822, the Provincial Court took charge of the property, by the appointment of a Sarharakar. There was also a claim preferred, on behalf of the Government, for the property, as an escheat, but it did not appear that that claim was prosecuted.

Held that the appellant's possession was not such a possession as could be regarded with any favourable eye (342.3).

It is not necessary to say how it should be dealt with if there was no title at all in the respondents. It is sufficient to observe that though doubts may exist as to the proportion in which the claimants should share, we think that the Decrees appealed from are right, to the extent that the res pondents, in some proportion or other, are entitled to the whole property. As against them collectively the appellant has no right at all (343). (Dr. Lushington.) KEERUT SING P. KOOLAHUL SING. (1840) 2 M. I. A. 331 = 5 W. R. 131=1 Suth. 96=1 Sar. 196.

Submerged Land.

ADVERSE POSSESSION OF.

-Interruption of during period of submergence. In a case in which the possession of the trespasser was in fact determined by the submergence of the land which then became derelict, Sir R. Garth seems to have thought that, even while the land remained in that state, the possession of the trespasser would continue, until the true owner resumed possession. Their Lordships cannot agree in this view. On the contrary, they think that on the dispossession of the trespasser by the vis major of the floods the constructive possession of the land was (if anywhere) in the true owners. For this purpose dispossession by vis major has the same effect as voluntary abandonment by the trespasser. (Lord Davry). SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL D. KRISHNAMONI GUPTA.

In order to sustain a claim to land by limitation under the Indian Act, there must be actual possession of a person claiming as of right by himself or by persons deriving title from him. There must be both absence of possession by the person who has the right and actual possession by another to bring the case within the statute.

Where the possession of trespasser was in fact determined by the sub-mergence of the land which then became derelict, held that, so long as it remained in that estate, no title could be acquired against the true owner. -The Limitation Act of 1877 does not define the term " dispossession "; but its meaning is well-settled.

A man may cease to use his land because he cannot use it, since it is under water He does not thereby discontinue his possession; constructively it continues, until he is dispossessed; and, upon the cessation of the dispossession before the lapse of the statutory period, constructively it revives. There can be no discontinuance by absence of use and enjoyment, when the land is not capable of use and injoyment. It seems to follow that there can be no continuance of adverse possession, when the land is not capable of use and enjoyment, so long as such adverse possession must rest on de facto use and occupation. When sufficient time has elapsed to extinguish the old title and start a new one, the new owner's possession of course continues until there is fresh dispossession, and revives as it ceases. PARTY WITH—POSSESSION WITH—PRESUMPTION OF.

The ordinary presumption would be that possession went with the title. That presumption cannot, of course, be of any avail in the presence of clear evidence to the contrary; but where there is strong evidence of possession, as there is here, on the part of the respondents opposed by evidence, apparently strong on the part of the appellant their Lordships think that, in estimating the weight due to the evidence on both sides, the, presumption may, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, be regarded (863). Having regard to the property as jungle land the courts below have held, in their Lordships' opinion correctly, that possession must be presumed to have been all long with the plaintiffs, who clearly had title to them until dispossession within the statutory period (543). Land originally under water but subsequently converted incompletely into mamp and then into habitable land.

The suit was for the recovery of two plots of land. The plaint in the suit was filed on 9.4-1881. The question for decision was whether the plaintiff's title was barred by the possession of the defendants, or by his own non-possession.

The condition of the land was such as to offer great difficulty in the proof of possession. In 1857, the whole land was under water, together with a contiguous larger tract. The only use or enjoyment consisted in fishing. There was subsequently a gradual, slow, and still incomplete conversion of that lake into swamp, and of swamp into habitable land and during that process parts of the land might not have been used at all for any purpose of enjoyment. The plaintiff's title to, and possession of, the suit land were affirmed in proceedings of the revenue survey in 1857. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants dispossessed him nearly 10 years before suit, and admitted that they continued to be in possession since the said date of dispossession. As regards the two years preceding the 10 years before suit during which the defendants were admittedly in possession, the plaintiff claimed, and the High Court held, that the presumption must be in favour of the title and former possession affirmed in 1857. The defendants, on the other hand, claimed that the presumption should be in favour of the state of things existing for 10 years. They contended that, though the plaintiff showed title and possession in 1857, he still must fail unless he could shew acts of possession and enjoyment later than the 9th of April, 1869, or that he must prove the act of dispossession by the defendants later than that date.

Their Lordships were not prepared to differ from the view of the High Court that the possession found in 1857 must be taken to have continued down to the time when the defendants entered upon possession (149-50). (Lord

POST OFFICE REGULATION.

- Insured parcels—Parcels insured for Rs. 250 or over—Window delivery insisted on in case of—Regulation as to—Scope and effect of

The Post-Office Regulation in effect is that at the local post offices throughout India and Burma, but only at these offices (for the Regulation does not apply to large towns, as, for example, Calcutta or Rangoon), parcels insured for Rs. 250 or over are given window-delivery only; they must be called for by or on behalf of the recipient; they are not delivered in the ordinary way to him at his place of address. The Regulation is clearly one for the limitation of the Post Office's liability as insurers; it is not a regulation designed for the greater safety of the insured parcels, so that an assured, who ignored it, was, almost thereby confessedly, exposing his jewels to hazard. On the contrary, it would not seem to be natural that an insured person whose jewels were protected under his policy until delivered at his place of address, should effect when under no obligation to do so a Post Office insurance which would leave them at his charge between the Post Office and his place of business. The Regulation was only locally operative. (Lord Blancihurgh.) BHOGILAL BHIKACHAND v. ROYAL INSURANCE CO. LTD. (1927) 6 R. 142=26 A. L. J. 377=

In the case of a gift of a joint power, the death of one of the donees puts an end to the joint power. This is not by virtue of any peculiar doctrine of English law or of any series of English decisions. It flows from the nature of a joint power. If power is given to A and B personne designatee to do an act if and when they think it desirable the occasion cannot arise nor can the power be exercised unless they are both living and in agreement as to the act. This cannot be the case after the death of one of them and the consequence is that the survivor cannot do the act because he has not the warrant of the agreement of his late colleague nor can he then do the act, seeing that the authority to do it is only given to the two acting jointly. The case is different when the power is vested not in personae designatoe but in the occupants for the time being of a specified office such as executors or trustees. (Lord Moulton.) Guaranteeing of loan to customors by pledging princital's credit-Power of, if included-Money-lending

The sole owner of a money-lending business carried on under a firm name appointed a person as his Attorney for the general management of his said business. The power of attorney executed in favour of that person stated the duties with which he was charged and the powers he was entrusted with as follows: "To transact, conduct and manage all and every or any of the affairs, concerns, mat-ters, and things in which I" (the owner of the business) now ant or hereafter may be in any wise interested and concerned, and for that purpose to use or sign my name to all and every or any documents or document, writings or writing whatsoever, To borrow money from any bank or banks, firm or firms, person or persons, either with or without pledge of securities for moneys advanced to various persons. To make, draw, sign accept, endorse, negotiate and transfer all and every or any bills of exchange, promissory notes, hundis, cheques, drafts, bills of lading and all and every other negotiable securiries whatsoever to which my signature or endorsement may be required or which my said attorney may in his absolute discretion think fit to make, draw, sign accept endorse, negotiate and transfer in my name and on my behalf."

On an application made by a customer of the firm to the agent for financial assistance, the agent entered into an arrangement with the customer to the effect that the agent should pledge the firm's credit with a bank to enable the customer to have a cash credit account opened in his certain sum in the aggregate, and that to secure the due repayment of that amount with interest thereon the customer should execute a promissory note in favour of the defendant's firm which the agent on his side should endorse over to the bank, with the result that both the customer and the firm became severally liable on the note, one as the drawer, the other as the indorser-

Held, that the transaction entered into by the agent with the customer was authorised by the power of attorney, and that the firm was bound by that transaction.

The business of the firm was a general money-lending business, in the course of which customers were financed. The agent's authority to borrow and to lend to others was an essential incident of the business. The authority to borrow implied an authority to pledge the credit of the firm for the purpose of obtaining or securing advances from others to customers. The authority to enter into transactions of the nature in question is to be found in the power of attorney itself by necessary implication from the nature of the business, with the general management of which the agent was entrusted (54-5). Respondent executed a general power of attorney in favour of her son, the relevant portions of the power being: -" And also buy, sell, mortgage, let and lease as the case may be any houses or lands and to borrow and take loans of money in my name upon such terms and conditions as he shall think proper . . . . . and generally to act for me in all matters and things touching or concerning all or any of my affairs as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if I were acting therein in person." Subsequently, respondent's son borrowed money from the National Bank of India on two joint and several promissory notes executed by him on his own behalf and as agent of respondent, and, with her consent, deposited with the Bank the title deeds of her house as security. When the notes became due, res pondent's son wrote a letter to appellant to the effect that in consideration of the latter paying the Bank the sum due under the notes, he (respondent's son) agreed to keep the title-deeds deposited with the Bank with appellant as security. Appellant paid the Bank duly but was not given the title deeds which were given by the Bank to the respondent's son or his man. It appeared that respondent did not agree to the deeds being given to appellant as security. In a suit brought by appellant against respondent and her son for the recovery of the amount paid by him to the Bank with interest and for a declaration that he was entitled to a charge or lien upon the property covered by the title-deeds in question in respect of the suit amount, held, (1) that, when appellant paid the Bank, he became entitled, in equity, to the benefit of the deposit of the title-deeds without any further assent by respondent; and (2) that respondent was bound by her son's letter to appellant although she did not personally assent to appellant keeping the title-deeds as security,

When the notes became due, the Bank might have sued her (respondent) upon them, and have also taken proceedings to have the mortgaged property sold. The letter (by her son to appellant) was intended to prevent this, and the name and obtain from the bank advances not exceeding a arrangement for continuing the security in consideration of

It seems to have been thought that it was faid down in the case of the Bank of Bengal v. Maclood, (5 M. I. Their Lordships cannot agree in this view of the case. The words there may have been used disjunctively, but they do not see any reason why the rule laid down by Lord Bacon, copulatio verlorum indicat acceptationem in codem sensu, which is intended to aid in arriving at the meaning of the parties, should not be used in construing a power of attorney as much as any other instrument (107). On or about 18-10-1878, the respondent deposited with his agents, Messes Nicholls & Co. (W. Nicholls and G. A. Thompson), promissory notes of the Government of India, amounting to Rs. 37,500, for which a receipt was given to him by Nicholis & Co, headed " Safe custody receipt." One of those notes was for Rs. 20 000.

On 18-10-1878, Watson (the respondent) executed and gave to Nicholls & Co, a power of attorney, in the following terms :-

Know all men by these presents, that I, Watson, do make, constitute, appoint W. Nicholls & G. A. Thompson, of Messrs Nicholls & Co., jointly and severally to be my true and lawful attorneys and attorney, for me and in my name, and on my behalf, from time to time to negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign and transfer, or cause to be procured and assigned and transferred, at their or his discretion, all or any of the Government promissory notes, or other Government paper, bank shares, or shares in any public company, and other stocks, funds, and securities of any description whatsoever, now or hereafter standing in my name, or belonging to me, or any part or parts thereof respectively. And also for me, and in my name, and on my behalf, from time to time, at their or his discretion, to contract for, purchase, and accept the transfer into my name of any Government promissory notes or other Government paper, bank shares, or shares in any public company, and other stocks, funds, and securities of any description whatsoever, now or hereafter standing in the name or names of, or belonging to any other person or persons. And also to receive all interest and dividends due, or to accrue due, on all or any of such stocks, funds, and securities. And for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them. to sign for me and in my name, and on my behalf, any and every contract or agreement, acceptance or other document. And to sign, seal, and deliver for me, and as my act and deed, and every deed which they or he may think expedient."

Held, that the agent had, under the power, no authority

The power of attorney in the present case is not in the same form as that in the Bank of Bengal v. Macleol (5 M. I. A. 1). It does not contain in express words a power to indorse." If it had, the question would have been whe ther there was anything to prevent it from being a power in the discretion of the done of it to indorse the note and so convert it into one payable to bearer whenever he thought fit to do so for any purpose. But in this power the indorsement is not anthorised in express words, but is authorised if it comes within the meaning of the words " And for the purposes aforesaid to sign for me, and in my name and on my behalf, any and every contract or agreement, acceptance, or other document." The "purposes aforesaid" are these. From time to time to negotiate, make sale, dispose of assign, and transfer or cause to be procured and assigned and transferred, at their or his discretion, all or any of the government promissory notes or other government paper, etc., and also for me and in my name, and on my hehalf, from time to time, at their or his discretion, to contract for, purchase, and accept the transfer into my name of any government promissory notes or other government paper,

Loans-Power of giving, and taking, conferred.

-Loan obtained by agent pursuant to-Binding nature of, on principal-Proof of borrowing on principal's account- Necessity.

The operative part of a mooktarnama executed by a lady in favour of her husband was as follows :-

I, the declarant, therefore, of my own free will and accord, appoint my husband my general mooktar, and declare to the effect that all acts done by the said mooktar, such as giving and taking loans to and from others; executing on my behalf, getting executed in my favour, deeds of absolute sale," and so on, "shall be accepted by me."

Semble, if it had been proved that the husband had contracted loans and obtained advances on behalf of his wife. it might be that under the above power of attorney the lady would be bound by his acts, as being within the scope of his authority. But it would have to be shown, not only that he borrowed the money, but that it was borrowed for her. If it had appeared that it was taken for his own purposes and the lender who advanced the money knew it, the wife could not be charged with it (45). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) SUDISHT LAL +. -Settlement of accounts, if included-Suit against principal based on such settlement and without independent proof of indebtedness-Maintainability.

The operative part of a mookhtamarnah executed by a lady in favour of her husband was as follows:-1, the declarant, therefore, of my own freewill and accord, appoint my husband my general mookhtar, and declare to the effect that all acts done by the said mooktar, such as giving and taking loans to and from others; executing on my behalf, getting executed in my favour, deeds of absolute sale," and so on " shall be accepted by me."

The plaintiff-appellant brought the suit out of which the appeal arose against the wife to recover a sum of money and interest upon the footing of a stated and settled account. The account had admittedly been settled, not by the defendant herself, but by her husband under authority conferred by the above mooktarnama. Without any proof that money had been borrwed at all, and certainly with none that it had been borrowed on the wife's account, the plaintiff sought to fix the defendant with the large deld sued for by the mere statement of account of her husband.

Held, upon the construction of the mooktarnama, that the busband had no authority to bind his wife by such a statement, whatever authority he might have had to bind her by an actual borrowing of money on her account (45).

(1915) 19 C. W. N. 787 (790).

Negotiable Instrument.

-Sell, endorse, assign - Power of, conferred - Endersement without selling-Power of, if included.

The payee of promissory notes of the E. I. Co., by a power of attorney, authorised his agents at Calcutta to "sell endorse and assign " the notes. These notes were transferable by endorsement, payable to locarer. The agents, in their character of private bankers, borrowed money of the Bank of Bengal, offering, as security, these promissory notes. The Bank made the advance, and the agents endorsed the notes, such endorsement purporting to be as attorney for their principal, and deposited them with the Bank, by way of collateral security for their personal liability, at the same time authorising the Bank, in default of payment, to sell the notes in reimbursement of the advances. The agents afterwards became insolvent, and default having heen made in payment, the Bank sold the notes and realised the amount of their loan.

Hdd, that the endorsement of the notes by the agents of the payee to the Bank was within the scope of the authority given to them by the power of attorney, and that the payee could not recover in definue against the Bank.

It is said that the words " sell, endorse, and assign," used conjunctively, cannot be used in the disjunctive, but that the only power given to endorse is one ancillary to sale, and that we are to read it, as if it were, power to sell, and for the purposes of selling, to endorse. It appears to us that the rational and the natural construction is the one which represents a power "to sell, endorse, and assign", as a power to sell, a power to endorse, and a power to assign - so that these acts may be done apart or together, and that the powers are conveyed conjointly and severally (38, 40).

The circumstance that the endorsement is to be only made for the benefit of the principal, and not for the purposes of the agent only relates to the purpose of the execution, not to the limits of the power itself; and though the endorsee's title must depend upon the authority of the endorser, it cannot be made to depend upon the purposes for which the endorser performs his act under the power (40). In order to see what was intended by the words "negoti-ate" and "dispose of " in a power of attorney, they must be looked at in connection with the context, as well as with the general object of the power. If the word "negotiate " had stood alone, its meaning might have been doubtful, though, when applied to a bill of exchange or ordinary promissory note, it would probably be generally understood to mean to sell or discount, and not to pledge it (108). P. who succeeded as heir to the estate of L. was incompetent to manage his property, and his wife, A', was appointed by the Collector to be sarbarakar or manager. She never was his guardian. She executed a general power of attorney in favour of A the expressed objects of which had reference to the lands of her husband, of which she was the sarbarakar, and 'o other lands of which she was herself the proprietiess. "Therefore" she said, "as regards the entire property possessed by me and my husband for the present and future, in my present capacity, and in such capacity as 1 may possess hereafter" she appointed four persons, of whom A was one, to be general attorneys. Then she specified a number of things that they might do. Every one of them might be referred, and indeed most readity referred, to the lands of P and A'. There was a power to obtain the permission of the District Judge to contract fresh debts " on the security of any property " for the purpose of paying off old debts of L; and again a power to renew documents of hypothecation for the purpose of extending the period of repayment. Both those powers had reference to charges on land; and in both those cases the attorneys were to prepare documents for A's own signature prior to registration.

In a case which had to be decided almost, if not entirely, on the credibility of the witnesses examined, the trial judge had not omitted any of the crucial points which ought to have been present to his mind in coming to a conclusion, and there was a very strong and logical case put forward against the probability of the truth of the opponent's story, held, that the case was one in which it could not be said that the trial judge had not had an advantage over an appellate court in seeing the various witnesses examined.

Where it was perfectly clear that the trial judge did not believe the story put forward by the opponent and his witnesses, and it was inevitable that he should have been influenced in his judgment by the view he formed of the credibility of the witnesses as they were examined before him, held further that it did not detract from the advantage which the trial judge had over an appellate court in seeing the various witnesses examined that he had not expressed --- Receival of -- Propriety-Condition.

Applying the well-established rules as to the amount of regard to be paid to the findings of a Judge who has decided matters of fact deposed to by witnesses at the trial before him, and having considered all the evidence admitted their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the Chief Justice (the Trial Judge) should stand, and that of the appellate Court should be set aside. (Lord Durling.) LIM YAW HONG E. LAW CHOON & CO.

(1927) 29 L.W. 520 = 47 C. L. J. 288 = 107 I. C. 457 = 30 Bem. L. R. 757 = A. I. R. 1928 P.C. 127 = 56 M. L. J. 88.

Where the issue is one of pure fact and its decision depends entirely on the credibility of conflicting witnesses, the Privy Council must of necessity be greatly influenced by the opinion of the trial judge who has seen and heard the witnesses. Except in rare cases which are suceptible of being dealt with wholly by agrument a Court of appeal will hesitate long before it disturbs the findings of a trial Judge based on verbal testimony.

By way of indicating the principles applicable to such cases, their Lordships quoted with approval the following passage in the judgment in Khoe Sit Hoh v. Lim Thean

Tong. (1912) A. C. 323, 325 :-

The case was tried before the Judge alone; it turned entirely on questions of fact; and there was plain perjury on one side or the other. Their Lordships' Board are, therefore, called upon, as were also the Court of appeal, to express an opinion on the credibility of conflicting witnesses whom they have not seen, or heard, or questioned. In coming to a conclusion on such an issue their Lordships must of necessity be greatly influenced by the opinion of the learned trial judge, whose judgment is itself under review. He sees the demeanour of the witnesses, and can estimate their intelligence, position and character in a way not open to the courts who deal with later stages of the case. Moreover, in cases like the present, where those courts have only his note of the evidence to work upon, there are many points which, owing to the brevity of the note, may appear to have been imperfectly or ambiguously dealt with in the evidence, and yet were elucidated to the Judge's satisfaction at the trial, either by his own questions or by the explanations of counsel given in presence of the parties. Of course, it may be that in deciding between witnesses he has clearly failed on some point to take account of particular circumstances or probabilities material to an estimate of the evidence, or has given credence to testimony, perhaps plausibly put forward, which turns out on more critical analysis to be substantially inconsistent with itself, or with indisputable fact. but except in rare cases of that character, cases which are susceptible of being dealt with wholly by argument, a court of appeal will besitate long before it disturbs the findings of a Trial Judge based on verbal testimony."

Held that, in the case before their Lordships, the above principle did not receive sufficient attention from the learned Judges of the High Court, who reversed the trial judge, and that there was not in their judgments or the criticism of the findings and evidence below sufficient ground for discharging the onus which lay so heavily on the appellant before them. If the elecision of the trial judge on an issue of fact proceeds upon the impression which he had formed from the demeanour of the witnesses, as to which of them was telling the trath, his decision ought not to be interfered with in appeal. Well-established principles limit the authority of Courts of Appeal to overrule findings of fact made by tribunals of first instance. A manifestly erroneous conclusion, which a reasonable judgment rejects, is not validated by the fact that it was arrived at after hearing and seeing witnesses. On the other hand, the veracity of witnesses is ordinarily to be finally determined by those before whom they give evidence. The value of corroborative or discreditive proof can best be judged by those who have before them all the persons involved. A conclusion of fact of one tribunal founded upon divers admissible facts of varying importance ought not to be overset because the balance of proof upon consideration of the matter by different minds in a new setting seems to incline against the conclusion originally drawn. It is no doubt the right and duty of an appellate Judge to criticise fearlessly where necessity arises by pointing out judicial shortcomings in a lower Court, but respect for the judicial office and common fairness require both that the criticisms should be expressed temperately and that the grounds for the criticism should be stated.

Where one of the appellate Judges allowed himself to say of the judgment of the Court below that from beginning to end it was full of misstatements and special pleading, but he did not specify any of the alleged misstatements, and his criticism was found to be wholly unfounded, their Lordships expressed disapproval of judicial criticism expressed in such a form. When a plaintiff on certain alleged facts asks relief and is unable to obtain a trial of the facts by reason of the conclusions of law which the Judge forms on the case in its then condition, the Court is bound to proceed upon the facts as they are stated by the plaint and upon the assumption of the truth of those facts.

The case must be determined as if it had arisen on a demurrer to a pleading or to evidence where such procedure exists. Courts cannot be justified in refusing to allow cases to go to proof upon any other assumption than that the facts alleyed are those capable of proof, and are proved. This assumption of the truth of facts alleged must however be limited to the consideration of the legal effect of the facts alleged upon the bars raised against the trial of those facts. The answers put in by the defendants can, in such cases, only be looked at for the purpose of ascertaining whether they raise the legal hars insisted on. (Sir Edward Williams.) (1866) 10 M. I. A. 540 (552-3) - 5 W. R. (P. C.) 83 -1 Suth. 635-2 Sar. 198.

The plaintiffs, claiming to be heirs, after the death of his widow, who survived him, of one J. sued to recover certain moveable and immoveable estate, the property of the deceased at his death. The defendants were persons in possession of the suit estate under alleged alienations by the widow of the deceased.

The title of the plaintiffs as heirs was described generally in the plaint, but the course in which it was derived appeared by a pedigree exhibited by the plaintiffs, and filed with the plaint. It thus appeared that the plaintiffs claimed as kindred of the de eased, connected with him by descent from their common ancestor, C. The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title. Admitting the pedigree to be correct as far as it went, and assuming, for the purpose of raising their objection to the title, all that the pedigree stated to be true, they contended by their answer, that the plaintiffs were not within the line of heirs.

The first Court held against the plaintiffs on the question of title and dismissed the suit. Its decision was reversed on appeal by the Sudder Court which remanded the case to the Court below for trial. On appeal to their Lordships the question for decision was whether the plaintiffs were too remote in degree to be heritable as gentiles.

Hold, that the decision in the Sudder Court, as well as that in the Court below, might be viewed as in the nature of a demorrer, on which any consideration of possible title on other assumed state of facts would have been irregular (389). In a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell land, the trial Judge held that the contract relied upon by the plaintiff was either a forgery or a fraud. The High Court, on the contrary, held that the plaintiff had made out his case for the actual execution of the contract. In affirming the High Court, their Lordships pointed out that the most striking observation made by the High Court was that the case of the defendants involving forgery or fraud was not pointedly put in the defendant's written statement. and, though perhaps open under the general words of the defence and on the third issue, it was put without detail or colour, was not raised in the cross-examination of the plaintiff or his witnesses, and, as far as could be seen, was only disclosed when defendant's witnesses after an interval of several months, came into the witness-box. DEFENCE PLEA-(Contd.)

Where fraud is charged against the defendants it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. General allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any court ought to take notice (121).

There can be no objection to the use of such general words as " fraud," or " collusion, " but they are quite ineffectual to give a fraudulent colour to the particular statements of fact in the plaint, unless these statements, taken by themselves, are such as to imply that a fraud has actually been committed (121). (1888) 15 I. A 119 = 15 C. 533 (537) = 5 Sar. 168.

-There is a well-known rule of pleading expressed in the frequently quoted language of Lord Selborne that "with regard to fraud, if there be any principle which is perfectly well settled, it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any court ought to take notice." The law of India is in no way different from this (151-2). (Lord Shire.) BAL GANGA-DAR TILAK D. SHRINIVAS PANDIT.

Before the Board it was suggested that the contract between the first respondent and the bank was induced by fraud, and was, therefore, voidable at his instance. It is sufficient for their Lordships to say that fraud was not pleaded in the Trial Court, nor was any issue directed to it, and it would be impossible for them to allow such a defence to be raised at this late stage of the proceedings. In a suit to enforce a mortgage, after the trial was over, arguments were heard, and judgment was reserved, the Subordinate Judge framed a supplemental issue as to whether the mortgage deed was valid under S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act because it appeared from the evidence of the witnesses to the mortgage deed that they were not present at its execution but had put their names on the document on the acknowledgment of the moregagors and, holding that the document was invalid under that section, he dismissed the suit save as regards a personal decree against the mortgagors. His decree was affirmed in appeal by the High Court. On an appeal to the Privy Council from the decrees of the Courts below it was urged that the Subordinate Judge acted irregularly and without jurisdiction in framing an issue under the above circumstances. Held, that S. 149 of the Code of 1882 was conclusive. The first part of that section leaves it in the discretion of the Court to frame such additional issues as it thinks fit, whilst the latter makes it imperative on the Judge to frame such additional issues as may be necessary to determine the controversy between the parties. The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, fully empowered to frame the issue on which he decided the case (222-3). (Mr. Ameer Ali.) SHAMU PATTAR P. ABDUL KADIR RAYUTHAN.
